MISCELLANY.

THE MECHANIC'S WIFE.

We cut the following from a recent number of the Christian Register. It has in it a natural pathos that will hardly fail to bring the heart into the throat of any who read it; while the lesson it so touchingly and gracefully gives is one for every husband and father to take into his heart—Home Journal]

"Shall you be very late to-night?" This question was asked to a soft low voice by a very pale, but very sweet young creature, as she parted from her husband in the street.

"I do not know that I shall," he replied, somewhat coldly, as replacing his cigar between his lips, he turned away. There was carelessness rather than unkindness in his manner, and she looked after him more in sorrow than reproach.

Taking the hand of her little boy, she slowly beat her steps homeward, with that drooping of the head which bespeaks sadness of heart. It was a Saturday night; she had been marketing, and her little purchases were contained in a basket which hung upon her arm. On reaching home, the very uppermost floor of a house in a poor but decent neighborhood, she rung the fire, seated Philip, her little son, beside it, gave him a piece of bread and butter for his supper, and began to busy herself in putting away the few necessities she had bought. By the time this was done, the drooping head of little Philip told her he was ready for his pillow. How tenderly he was taken to his lonely mother's lap—his pretty face washed—his bright hair brushed—and he arrived in his snowy bedchamber. Pressed to her bosom, he warmed his little feet by her hand, returning to them again and again from the fire, to which she every now and then held her open palm, then pressing the soft foot, she kissed it playfully, and provoked the laughter so sweet to her mother's ear. These were Philip's first training lessons; thus were gentle and love awakened in his infant spirit by his capable, but unstructured unassisted mother. How full of meaning was his smile—how full of emotion! and when, kneeling in her lap, she joined his little hands, and bade him ask his heavenly Father to bless his earthly parent, how sympathetically he caught the sweetly serious look—the calm and holy tone of his instructor.

Susan, after a time, felt that she was passing through the valley of the shadow of death. This conviction did not depress her energies—it awakened them. She had communed with her own meek heart, fitted it to her mighty Maker, and remembered with consolation that it is said, "Those also serve who only stand and wait." She struggled on from day to day in the performance of her duties, and in many privations, the worst of all privations, that of mental development and social cheer; yet had she a conscious account in her own heart, and her sincere and unassisted endeavor had no doubt a register and the higher achievements of more favored minds. With the certainty that she was not long for this scene, she redoubled her exertions to put her little household in order. She repaired and made clothes for her child, and, as she laid them away, she bathed them with her tears. In the same manner her needle toiled for her husband, and the savings which her frugality effected were employed to purchase him sundry little comforts.

"These will keep him warm when I am cold," she thought; "he will little think that while he forgets me, for better company, 't is true my only happiness was to remember him."

and that I shall scarcely be more solitary in the grave to which I am going, than I have been in the home to which he brought me."

Sometimes a little ink-bottle was taken from the mantle shelf, and a sheet of paper from a little table drawer and then, with effort, a few lines were traced, and the paper hidden carefully away, as if she had committed a crime.

One night she made more endeavors of this than usual, and the struggling unassisted spirit of intelligence was burning in her bright,azel eyes, and glowing on her beautiful cheek when she was startled by an unusual noise.

The paper was hurried to the shelf, and taking her candle, she went out to the landing-place. She bade her husband, assisted by two men, slowly ascending the stairs. He had not been in accident; he had broken his arm—it had been set—he had waited during the operation—and with the ghastliness of aspect incident to such circumstances, appeared before her.

This event prostrated Philip Morris for some time, during which Susan nursed him with untiring care. It was long before he was able to return to work, but employers were liberable and considerate, and did not forget in his weakness the man who had toiled for their advantage in his days of health and strength. But, though unable to pursue his manual labors, Philip Morris soon made an effort to get abroad in search of mental occupation and mental enjoyment. He went to his club, to the Mechanic's Institute, to the coffee-shop, where he could find the best selected books and the most newspapers. All this was well done; he nobly determined to rescue himself from becoming the mere machine of toil, the drudge for so much "trash as can be grasped thus." Alas! had he but thought of her whom he had promised to love and cherish till death should part them, and he considered whether she had not a soul of equal value with his own, perhaps an intellect as capable of repaying culture—then had he been twice blessed—blessed in the act and its effects. But selfishly devoted to his own objects of pursuit, habituated to the vanities of life, he failed to perceive that her cheek grew paler, and her voice weaker; not that he had been inensible or indifferent to her care and anxiety during his illness; but with renovated health he returned to his old habits, and accustomed to receive sacrifice without making any, he stood against gratitude and good feeling at most unconsiously. Gradually Susan found herself unequal to even the daily walk with little Philip, or the effort of going up and down stairs, and there was some talk of her returning home for a time, and trying the effects of her native air. She grieved feebly as this was spoken, yet left unattempted; she knew that she was going to a further and a better home, and often did she wish to say as much; but she was not eloquent of words, nor sufficiently strong in spirits, and after two or three fruitless attempts she desisted, and pursued, as far as she was, the even tenor of her way.

Philip Morris recovered his health, and was restored to work and full wages; again he tried of the country for Susan, and insisted on her trying a new doctor; he sought to tempt her appetite by such rarities as he could afford, but still he could not resign his own peculiar habits and enjoyments, and among the evils these entailed were late hours.

One night he returned home as usual, about midnight, when on opening the room door instead of the small bright fire, the dimmed candle, and the pale, pale-faced worker he was accustomed to behold, all was darkness and silence.

Philip Morris recovered his health, and was restored to work and full wages; again he tried of the country for Susan, and insisted on her trying a new doctor; he sought to tempt her appetite by such rarities as he could afford, but still he could not resign his own peculiar habits and enjoyments, and among the evils these entailed were late hours.

Administrator's Notice.
PURSUANT to a license of the Court of Probate within and for the County of Norfolk, will be sold at public auction, on the premises, on MONDAY, the eighth day of April next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, so much of the real estate of THOMAS HARDING, late of Weymouth, deceased, as will produce the sum of six hundred and seventy dollars, and the amount of the payment of his just debts as aforesaid. Said estate consists of a Pew inherited from the Meeting house of the Union Society in Weymouth; also a barn or stable, and about seven-eighths of an acre of salt marsh, bordering together with thirty two acres and one-half of woodland known as the "Hunt lot," and all in the town of Weymouth. Conditions will be made known at the time on the premises.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

POETRY.

(For the Quincy Patriot.)
OUR PHILANTHROPISTS

The blood of a Yankee exciting starts,
As his foot presses Bunker's tom'd hill,
The names of its heroes are dear to our hearts
And full proudly we cherish them still.

The Statesmen whose virtues have won them a name,
Are all fresh in our memory yet;
Their pictures are grav'd in our Temple of Fame,
And their merit we will not forget.

Yet others there are who ne'er handled the sword,
Nor shone in the Council of State,
A richly deserving the grateful reward,
We give to the good and the great.

With Christian philanthropy taking the cross,
They probe to the hearts of mankind,
And in the rough caskets imbedded in dross,
Fair gems of humanity find.

For others they plead to the hearts of the proud,
With Christian persuasion they knock,
That heart must be laid in an abiding shroud,
That philanthropy cannot unlock.

Unflinching they go over ocean and land,
Oft found at the prisoner's door,
At the footstep of Justice they take their bold stand,
And plead for the guilty and poor.

A brother and friend to the sick and forlorn,
Counselor, advisor and shield,
The objects east of to the world's cruel scorn,
By them are uplifted and healed.

Unceasing their labor oft painfull their task,
Like water their charities flow,
Who needs their assistance he but to ask,
And freely their aid they bestow.

They seek no reward in this region of tears,
For others themselves they do,
And such were the Howard and such are the Spears,
Whose names will be honor'd on high.

F. M. Adlington, Weymouth

(For the Quincy Patriot.)

WE MEET NO MORE.

Lady with whom not before me,
When I tell thee o'er and o'er,
That my heart is sad and weary,
With the thought—we meet no more.

Far in distant lands I've wandered,
Over mountain, lake and sea,
Nature's scenes have oft enchanted,
But I've only worshipp'd thee.

With the jovous I have mingled,
By the lovely been exressed,
And the hand of wealth and power,
Of my own has warmly pressed.

Learned men have sometimes flattered
Me with friendly word and smile,
Moss her soft strain has added,
My heart's sadness to beguile.

And the Muse, that charming sister,
Fairest, loveliest of the nine,
Fondly strives to soothe my anguish,
With her numbers all divine.

But 't is useless, every effort
To assuage my grief's vain,
All my thoughts are turned to sadness,
Since we may not meet again.

Lady, then I pray believe me,
When I tell thee o'er and o'er,
Thou my heart is sad and lonely,
Wretched since we meet no more.

Detroit, Feb. 14, 1850. W. A. B.

GROWING OLD.

growing old—how the thought will rise, is backward east
When we plane
Some long moments.

In the silence of the past,
It may be the shrine of our early—
Or the tomb of early years;
But it seems like a far off isle to us,
In the stormy sea of years."

ANECDOTES.

Equity—A gentleman travelling in a gig, in the vicinity of London, on coming to a turnpike, stopped for a ticket, and while the gate-keeper was proceeding to give it, he threw the toll money down on the road; the gate-keeper, with great censure, immediately took it up, and placed the ticket on the same spot which the gentleman, perceiving and being anxious to proceed on his journey, requested him to give it up; but turning on his heels, he said, "No, Master up; but turning on his heels, he said, "No, Master where I receive my money there I always leave the receipt," and immediately left the gentleman to get out of the gig and take it up himself.

"Well John," said a doctor to a lad whose mother he had been attending during her illness, "how is your mother?" "She's dead, I thank you, sir."

"I am now about to do for you, what the devil never did for ye," said a quaint person in his valentine, "that is, I shall leave you!"

At a meeting of the church, the pastor gave out the hymn concluding with "I love to steal awhile away," which the church-communicant sang; but owing to some difficulty in recollecting the tune, could not proceed farther than "I love to steal," which he did three or four times in succession, when the clergyman, in order to release him from the dilemma, waggishly remarked that it was "very much to be regretted," and added, "let us pray."

An old farmer "out west" was in the nightly habit of counting his live stock, to see whether they had gone astray. Said he to his son, "John, have you counted the hogs?" "Yes, sir." "And the turkeys?" "Yes, sir." "And the cows?" "Yes, sir." "And the sheep?" "Yes, sir." "Well, John, now go and wake up the old hen, and count her, and then we'll go to bed!"

P. LOWS UNION HOT AIR

Cooking Stove and Fuel Saver.

THIS is a most beautiful and extraordinary Cooking Stove. The even and regular application of the heat to the Oven, gives this Stove all the advantages of a brick Oven—while at the same time the boiler is so constructed that the heat is immediately applied to the boilers from the fire pit, which makes this stove the most complete and finished Air Tight Cook Stove in America.

AS A COAL COOKING STOVE.

it is just suited for the use of families in cities and villages, and will perform the cooking of a family of from 2 to 8, 10 or 20 persons with certainty and despatch. The fire-chamber is constructed of a size, form and depth, to burn coal with the greatest freedom and economy. WOOD may be used with equal advantage by simply dispensing with the brick lining of the fire-chamber.

A SUMMER APPARATUS

is attached to the front, affording, of itself, ample convenience for light summer work, without the unpleasant effort and expense of heating the main body of the stove; it may also be used at the same time that the rest of the stove is occupied, greatly adding to its value, and rendering it altogether the most efficient Cooking Stove for the class of families for whom it is expressly designed, even yet invented.

A person who will give this stove a trial, will be convinced of its superiority for ECONOMY, CONVENIENCE, DURABILITY, over any other Air Tight Cooking Stove.

It is guaranteed to it the means of all families who want a good stove.

A pamphlet containing a description and directions for fitting up and using this Stove is furnished, gratis, to every purchaser.

Those Stoves of the different sizes may be examined at the

Tin and Sheet Iron Manufactory

of the Agent in this town.

E. S. FELLOWS, Agent for the above Store, has also for sale at his Store, the REGULATOR, ECONOMISTS, and various other articles of Cook Stove, as well as PARLOR, OFFICE, and CYLINDER.

start it gentlemen—we shall not dwell long upon this tea. Forty cents a pound I hear bid—forty, forty, forty, forty cents a pound only, is bid; 212 did I hear?"

"Yis, forty-two an' a half, I bid," said Peter Flinn, in a tone of voice that fairly startled some of the merchants. The auctioneer paused.

"Your bid, sir?"

"Yis, it's me; go ahead."

"We're not selling a single pound or a box, but 800 chests?"

"Be dad, I know that, sir? go on wid it."

The merchants snickered, the auctioneer grinned; no more bids were made and down came the tea, eight hundred chests.

"The name sir?" said the auctioneer.

"Peter Flinn."

"Where's your house, Mr. Flinn?"

"Me house?"

"Yes sir—your place of business."

"Me house? fax, I've no house; it's two rooms an' cellar I have, in Wather Street, me place of business is here upon the wharf."

"Your endorser's name, if you please?"

"Stephen Gerad, sir?" This dubious declaration produced another stretch of the phizies of the merchants, and the auctioneer, in great doubt, put up another lot of 500 chests. Down it quickly went to Peter Flinn! And so likewise went the third lot. When the sale concluded, the merchants glided off, believing that the auctioneer was certainly a sold man. But, on presenting the bills and notes of Peter Flinn at the desk of Stephen Girard, the old fellow cashed them on sight. The sales came to nearly $100,000; the tea was much wanted in the market, and Peter Flinn got rare bargains, and before noon next day, received $15,000 bonus, for his bid on the cargo of tea. The cargo was soon transferred, Girard indemnified, and the poor drayman found himself with a snug little fortune in his bob.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1850

John A. Green, Editor.

In the report of the Town Meeting in our last paper, we accidentally omitted the names of persons chosen Auditors, viz:—George Curtis, Edwin S. Savil, Nathaniel M. Bean, James M. Beckford, Nathaniel H. White.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT. As the New York steamer-boat train between Worcester and Norwich was passing a bridge on Monday evening last, the bridge gave way and the whole train, with the exception of the engine, tender and baggage car, went down into the river. The water was about seven feet deep. The cars were crowded with passengers, but only one person was killed, a brakeman—many of the passengers, were, however, more or less bruised. The conductor was severely injured.

A table is published stating the number of persons killed on Massachusetts' railroads last year at sixty-four; injured one hundred and two.

NOTICE. Attention is called to the advertisement of J. A. Holden, who, in the line of tailoring, offers first rate chances; and as his goods are goods and the workmanship none can doubt we refer our readers to his general notice, assuring all that we believe what he promises will meet their acceptance.

THE LAST WORD. We have asked many and also written for our just dues. This notice is to inform them (we have no reference to friends who owe one or two years) but to those who are indebted several years that their accounts will certainly be placed (unless settled before the 25th inst.) in the hands of William S. Morton Esq., or Gen. Fisher A. Kingsbury, to proceed in such manner as they deem advisable and according to law.

We are pressed to this point, as we have payments to make, and there cannot be any deviation.

LEGISLATIVE. In Congress, the whole is slavery; and in General Court, all is talk. When will the people send practicable men to represent them?

"THE UNION OF THE HUMAN RACE." We have received from the author of this Lecture, delivered before the Quincy Lyceum, a pamphlet copy, for which he will please accept our thanks. We intend to make one or more extracts in a future number as the ideas of the learned lecturer meet our views. Copies of this Lecture can be purchased at the Quincy Bookstore.

NEW STYLE OF HATS. John Dinegan has received direct from New York, Beebe's spring style of hats, which he offers for sale as appears by his advertisement. That the hats from this extensive manufactory are made of the best stock and the workmanship unsurpassed, all will confess who may make a trial. We know from experience, and therefore can advise our friends to call without delay and get a Beebe hat.

Benjamin Thompson, who has been run by the Whigs as a candidate for member of Congress from the Fourth District, declines being any longer a candidate. Hon. J. G. Palfrey, (free soil whig,) and Hon. Frederic Robinson (democrat) still continue as candidates. The whigs are to hold a convention to make a nomination.

Robert G. Shaw, a son-in-law, has voluntarily paid over to Littlefield, the three thousand dollars reward offered for the recovery of the remains of Dr. Parkman.

Debtors now tell their creditors, when they call upon them, that they expect remittances in the next steamer from their friends in California. The excuse is a good one, but now nearly threadbare. One debtor of ours has been a whole year receiving his remittances, and they have not yet come into a larger circle of the public patronage.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor of the Nurseries at Haworth Grove, Dorchester (Mass.) is anxious to dispose of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES thereon, with a view to improvement of the ground the coming season:

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, and other FRUITS, embrace almost every apperred sort of American or Foreign origin extant, and is scarcely surpassed in excellence or extent of variety.

Special Cultivation has been bestowed on the PEARS, and many thousands of thriving vigorous trees, are now ready for transplantation.

Extra Size TREES, with fruit buds, and well furnished with branches, and such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also—All the new varieties of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, etc, and at rates less than is generally charged for novelties.

SCIONS for exportation and the home trade can be had from bearing trees, thereby ensuring correctness of nomenclature.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experience of many years, will be made by the Proprietor, and which will seldom fail to please the correspondents.

(The Quincy Patriot.)
OUR MIGHTY MEN!

"All men are born free,"—Jefferson.
And curst be who would enslave.—Adlington.
You mighty honorable men, who rule
The destinies of this majestic nation,
I would to God you had been sent to school,
To learn to govern well not play the fool,
E'er you obtained your honorable station.

While you are chattering like a flock of daws,
Banding the tides, liars, traitors, knaves,
The wretched bondsman pines oppress'd by laws,
That makes stern Justice drop the sword and pause,
Laws made by tyrant lords t' oppress their slaves.

Think on the value of that glorious prize,
Dear Liberty, of which so much you boast;
Then toward the bondsman's hovel turn your eyes;
Behold your work an insult to the skies;
His hopes are dead, his birthright Freedom lost.

Yet you can sit and preach from morn till night,
About your justice and your tender hearts,—
Hatred to tyrants, sense of wrong and right,
Traffic in human flesh both black and white,
Boast of religion and display your parts.

How can you be so happy, tell me how?
Hark! hear you not bereaved parents mourn!
The indignant father 'neath the lash must bow,
While all regardless of the mother's woe,
Forced from her arms, her shrieking child is torn.

Have you not read that you should break the yoke,
That binds the captive and his bonds release?
How dare you then of this to make a joke,
While you your Clay in old Madeira soak,
And live so comfortable at your ease!

But what care you about the bondsman's groans,
You have no lack you have your fortunes made;
What care you for his hapless children's moans,
You that have pigmy souls and hearts of stone,
What need you care so long as you are paid—eight dollars per day.

F. M. Adlington, Weymouth.

THE OLD CLOCK IN THE HALL.

It stands in a corner of the room,
Behind the door, in the shade and gloom,
In a heavy and antique case,
Rich mahogany, maple and oak,
Battered and scratched, and dim with smoke,
And the hands are bent on the face!

The knob and hinges are red with rust,
The top o' th' mouldings covered with dust,
The panels are yellow with stains,
And a ragged web like a tattered pall
Runs from its side to the sombre wall,
And over the window panes.

The pendulum swings, the wheels go round,
Making a dull, monotonous sound,
As the vanishing moments fleet;
A "tick," like the falling of grains of sand,
As time was pouring from out his hand
The dust of years at his feet!

Years have vanished—forgotten years—
With all their sorrows and sins and tears,
And left their marks in the hall;—
The old have died, the young grown old—
Generations have gone to mould,
And the clock survives them all.

Beautiful girls have watched the hours,
Knitting at stands, or working flowers,
In frames of "broidery fine"—
And mornings, the young folks playing late,
Wishing the moments fettered to "eight,"
For the school began at "nine"!

Mothers, with sons in distant lands,
Sorrowing, chid their tardy hands,
And dreamed of the meeting dear—
And wives, whose husbands returned at night,
Marked the time in the fading light,
And listened for footsteps near!

Blushing brides, at their toilets gay,
In snowy robes on the happy day,
Have waited the hour to wed;
And sick folks, tossing on beds of pain,
Gazed at the clock again and again,
And watched beside the dead!

But years have vanished, and others fill
Their place, and the old clock standeth still Ticking as in its pride:
Summer and winter, day and night,
A sexton chiming the hours' flight,
Tolling the knell of Time!

ANECDOTES.

Two men in Louisiana, this one a Spaniard and the other an American, fought a duel. The Spaniard had the force of numbers, he chose the knife. The conditions were, that the duelists should sit on the ground, feet to feet, and that the knives should be placed at the side of each; at a signal, each was to take up the knife and use it as he best could upon his adversary. The American, knowing how skillful the Spaniard was with his favorite weapon, instead of taking up the knife at once, struck with his fist his opponent between the eyes, and stunned him, after which he despatched him.

A well known physician, was very much annoyed by an old lady, who was always sure to accost him in the street, for the purpose of telling over her ailments. Once she met him when he was in a very great hurry. "I see you are quite feeble," said the doctor; "shut your eyes, and show me your tongue." She obeyed, and the doctor moved off, leaving her standing there for some time in this ridiculous position, to the infinite amusement of all who witnessed the funny scene.

"Quit spitting that nasty tobacco on the floor, Josh, or I'll whip you." "La, mother, why don't you speak properly. You should have said, 'cease rejecting that offensive saliva of the Virginia weed upon the promenade, or I shall administer to you a severe castigation." Exit Josh, precipitately, followed by mother with broom.

REMOVAL.

The subscriber takes this method to inform his customers and the public, that he has moved to the new building lately erected by Mr. Sam'l Copland, it being more commodious and better adapted to his business; and also, would tender his sincere thanks for the liberal share of patronage which he has received during the past year. His former customers and the public generally are invited to call, where will be found a variety of Stoves, among which is

New England Air-Tight, embodying in the highest degree of perfection, every essential quality requisite for any latitude. This Stove presents itself externally in a plain dress, with just and admirable proportions, giving it the appearance of a chaste and tastefully made piece of Cabinet Furniture. Internally, the location and capacity of the Fire Chamber is such as to remove effectually the objections often made to Air-Tight Cook-Stoves for country use. The Oven proves itself to be precisely what its projectors intended it should be, viz: the largest and most perfect ever constructed in a family Stove. The Fire Chamber is the great responsibility of a stove, depending, differently, on any fire before used, and are of such construction, and capacity as to ensure the most perfect draught, without liability to fill up, and are easily kept clean. Nearly one hundred of this stove have been sold the past year, and all have given the utmost satisfaction.

Also—A variety of PARLOR, OFFICE and CYLINDER STOVES, together with a good assortment of TIN, BRITANIA, SHEET IRON and Japanned Ware.

P. LOW'S UNION HOT AIR

Cooking Stove and Fuel Saver.

THIS is a most beautiful and extraordinary Cooking Stove. The even and regular application of the heat to the Oven, gives this Stove all the advantages of a brick Oven—while at the same time the boiler holes are so constructed that the heat is immediately applied to the boilers from the fire pit, which makes this stove the most complete and finished Air Tight Cook Stove in America.

AS A COAL COOKING STOVE,

it is just suited for the use of families in cities and villages, and will perform the cooking of a family of from 2 to 8, 10 or 20 persons with certainty and despatch. The fire-chamber is constructed of a size, form and depth, to burn coal with the greatest freedom and economy. WOOD may be used with equal advantage by simply dispensing with the brick lining of the fire-chamber.

A SUMMER APPARATUS

is attached to the front, affording, of itself, ample convenience for light summer work, without the unpleasant effects and expense of heating up the main body of the stove; it may also be used at the same time that the rest of the stove is occupied, greatly adding to its value, and rendering it altogether the most efficient Cooking Stove for the class of families for whom it is expressly designed, ever yet invented.

Any person who will give this stove a fair trial, will be convinced of its superiority for ECONOMY, CONVENIENCE and DURABILITY, over any other Air-Tight Cooking Stove.

Its price brings it within the means of all families who want a good stove.

A pamphlet containing a description and directions for fitting up and using this Stove is furnished, gratis, to every purchaser.

These Stoves of the different sizes may be examined at the

Tin and Sheet Iron Manufactury

of the Agent in this town. E. S. FELLOWS, Agent for the above Store, has also for sale at his Store, the REGULATOR, ECONOMIST'S, and various other patterns of Cook Stove, as well as PARLOR, OFFICE, and CYLINDER.

"Awake! awake!

Ring the alarm bell!—Murder and treason!

Bang and Donald! Malcolm! awake!

Shake off this drowsy sleep, Death's counterfeit!

One of the crowded Mississippi river packets arrived at the New Orleans levee, bringing several hundred visitors to the city. On the way down the river, at Natchez, Vidalia, and other large towns and intermediate landings,

new crowds of passengers were taken on-board, and it was utterly impossible for all to obtain sleeping accommodation. The berths were all occupied at an early hour, some of them being made to "carry double" on this occasion, and the floor of the cabin was piled deep when night came on.

"Dear husband," said the wife, "we are still rich in each other and our children.

Money may pass away, but God has given us a better treasure in those active hands and loving hearts."

"Dear father," said the children, "do not look so sober. We will help you get a living."

"What can you do, poor things?" said he.

"You shall see, you shall see," answered several voices. "It is a pity if we have been to school for nothing. How can the father of eight children be poor? We shall work and make you rich again."

"I shall help," said the younger girl, hardly four years old. "I will not have any new things bought, and I shall sell my great doll."

The heart of the husband and the father, which had sunk within his bosom like stone, was lifted up. The sweet enthusiasm of the scene cheered him, and his nightly prayer was like song of praise.

They left their stately house. The servants were dismissed. Pictures and plate, rich carpets and furniture, were sold, and she who had been the mistress of the mansion shed no tears.

"Pay every debt," said she; "let no one suffer through us, and we may be happy."

He rented a neat cottage and a small piece of ground, a few miles from the city. With the aid of his sons he cultivated vegetables for the market. He viewed with delight and astonishment the economy of his wife, nurtured

as she had been in wealth, and the efficiency which his daughters soon acquired under her training.

The eldest one instructed in the household, and assisted the younger children—besides,

they executed various works, which they had learned as accomplishments, but which they found could be disposed of to advantage.

They embroidered with taste some of the ornamental parts of female apparel, which were readily sold to a merchant in that city.

"What is the meaning of this?"

"Let me beg of you all to compose yourselves," said the watchman, in a tone as loud as his lungs could reach. "Go to sleep, and no body shall disturb you."

Muttering many maledictions, the passengers composed themselves again; but in a few moments another outrageous clatter arose.

"What is the matter?" inquired several voi-

said the watchman, in a tone as loud as

"We never knew how many things we could do, when we lived in the great house,"

said the children, "and we love each other a great deal better here. You call us your little ones."

"Yes, replied the father, "and you make just such honey as the heart likes to feed on."

Economy as well as industry was strictly observed; nothing was wasted. Nothing unnecessary was purchased. The eldest daughter became assistant teacher in a distinguished female seminary, and the second took her place

as instructor to the family."

"And I was never so happy before," said the mother.

"We never knew how many things we could do, when we lived in the great house,"

great deal better here. You call us your little ones."

"We shall return to the city?"

"Oh no," was the unanimous reply.

"Let us remain," said the wife, "we have found health and contentment."

"Nothing," said the mad wag. "I was only going to tell you not to disturb yourself. Go to sleep—I mean nothing."

"Nothing! You be d—d. Punch a man in the ribs with a long pole, and call that nothing! Why don't you go to bed?"

"I'm going—don't disturb yourself. After hearing this consoling advice, the fat man turned over on his side again composed himself to sleep.

Silence now reigned for the space of some ten minutes, but it was not destined to be of long continuance; for one of the merry wights caught a glimpse of the breakfast-bell quietly ringing on the table. This was just the thing, ting a ling a ling a ling! soon resounding from one end of the boat to the other.

Every body jumped from bed, anxious to be prepared early for the great festival and no sooner were a sufficient number of berths vacated than the mischievous "Council of Ten" quietly took them for their own special purposes and were soon enjoying a freshening morning nap—and thus ended one scene of fun on the Mississippi.

SINGING SCHOOL.

That a well-conducted Singing School is a public benefit, is readily admitted. And to the reflecting and benevolent, I think it will appear obvious, that a school supported by general subscription, for the benefit of all who wish to learn to sing, many of whom would feel unable to attend a select school, is better calculated to develop the musical talent of the community, if properly conducted, than a select school.

And cannot Quincy, Massachusetts, the birth place of American Independence or self-government, have a free, orderly, well-conducted Singing School, in which the principles of this useful science can be taught our rising youth?

We have the best Hall in the place, warmed and lighted by the generosity of the town; the best season of the year to accommodate all; the best teacher that can be obtained, paid by the public to have the school free; a hundred Dollars subscribed to defray expenses, and the promise of more; and a Hall well filled with interesting scholars.

Must this excellent School, get up by much benevolent design and arduous labor, be retarded in its course of usefulness by disorder both in and out of school hours? Is it to be disturbed by the class for whose special benefit the free plan was adopted? If this experiment of a free school fail to accomplish more public good than a select school, generation may pass in this town, before another will be tried. Now is the accepted time for their present and future improvement in this happy science, by using all their influence to promote the good order of the School.

Must this School be disturbed by that class who prefer a select school; and therefore are reckless and disorderly in this? Have they no sympathy that that numerous class who either could not, or would not ever learn to sing, were it not for the free school? Do they wish to enjoy this great blessing alone? God commands us to "look, not every one on his own things, but also, on the things of others;" that is, to plan and execute, as we have ability and means for the good of others. "To do good unto all men as we have opportunity." Will they disloye God, live only for self, and hinder others in a laudable improvement?

There is another class of disturbers who take no direct interest in the School, but attend for amusement, and appear regardless of the rules of common courtesy, or self-respect, and indulge in talking, laughing, whispering, etc., greatly to the annoyance of all around them who wish to learn. Such conduct is disgusting to every intelligent and virtuous observer. Will they for such insipid amusement continue their disturbance? Let such endeavor to render their presence a blessing and not an evil, and all will be well. They may, in many ways, profit themselves and the School by attending.

Should this free plan fail, it will be only on account of unnecessary disorder, in which case, what a disgrace to this ancient and honorable town.

What a loss to succeeding generations of the poor, by closing the Halls of this science against them.

What an occasion for raising up a set of aristocratic singers on the one hand, and of out door rowdies on the other.

Will the parents of our youth, our Ministers, superintendents and teachers, and all other benevolent and patriotic citizens, use their influence in favor of this free, large and useful School, and to ease the burden of the gentlemanly and able Instructor?

T. K.

(Correspondence of the Quincy Patriot)

BOSTON, April 18th, 1850.

Friend Green—After this long silence, I again write a few thoughts on the current matters of the day to you and your readers. Winter is still lingering among us, loath to depart for the inhospitable regions of some northern lines of latitude.

One more act in the great tragedy, and then, I hope the public mind will become placid again. Every one seems to be speculating on the ultimate fate of Professor Webster on this side of the grave—all being satisfied that some scourge will be afforded him in the dark monarchy which lies beyond. Few are they who think him guiltless of the blood of Dr. Parkman. But the Doctors of Law disagree (a very strange thing!) respecting the law of implied malice as laid down by Chief Justice Shaw in his charge to the jury. But that doctrine has long been acted upon in this Commonwealth, and there is but little reason to fear or hope, as the case may be, that it will be set aside for the accommodation of Dr. Webster in his present exigency. He has often been accommodated in times past, and alas! how he required his benefactors. It is asking a little too much of the State that it should suspend the laws instead of himself. He broke the law, and it is but just that the law should break his neck. A poor rule that which won't work both ways.

Death of the gallows is attended with shame and ignominy, it is true, but there is some consolation in the thought that its victim is not suddenly hurried into eternity, without warning and without a moment's preparation by the quick stab of a dirk, or the blow of a bludgeon or sledge hammer; and that he recognizes the hand of justice in the verdict which dooms him to such a death—that it is the just expiation of his crime.

I am glad to hear that Mr. Burrill has been appointed assistant Secretary to Professor Sears. This recognition of his merits is very grateful to his friends here. He is a man of benevolent feelings, of clear views and practical abilities.

Mr. Richards, the faithful servitor for Norfolk, has been highly instrumental in effecting this appointment. Mr. Richards has shown a laudable spirit in this matter, as he has in all those questions which have come up for consideration in the Senate chamber or Committee room this winter. He is not a cunning orator, but a man of good sense; his mind is not darkened by clouds of antiquated learning, like that of that literary dandy, George S. Hilliard, but he gorges public measures with a practical mind—with a mind familiar with the labors and stern duties of life.

Having heard Mr. Linn's lecture delivered before your Lyceum well spoken of, and having seen it favorably noticed by the Press, I thought I would read it carefully. Like all of his productions, it is classic, clear, bold, eloquent of classic beauty and fire; but its scope and end are entirely wrong. The Union is in no danger, the sentiment of attachment to it is universal—it is deep and irradicable, and there is no just reason for fearing its decay. But there is reason for fearing the extension of slavery. Freedom and Slavery are at issue at this very moment in Congress. Territory, in which slavery once existed, is threatened with a second visitation in the dreadful form it wears at the south, where touch is death—withering up the face of the country, and gangrening the members of the inhabitants. And is this a time to raise up collateral and false issues? Is this a fit moment to arrest the attention of the public mind so intently directed to the battle between Freedom and Slavery, now going on in the halls of Congress, by raising a false alarm among the friends of the former? oh, no! Northern men are renouncing the cherished sentiments of the North; and, for their own votes and speeches, rather let them, we pray, be grieved with a universal hiss of scorn. May their names and memories perish or rather "let infamy hang her black escutcheon over their graves."

I had thought of touching on a few topics of domestic intelligence, but I see I have spun out my web too long already. In my next, I propose to speak of high taxes, rents and fares, pertaining to Quincy—also, the want of a High School, whereby Quincy has become devoid of refined ladies and gentlemen, by means of all which things, large families migrate to the north and west of Boston.

Yours, affectionately,

JUNIUS.

DISSOLVING VIEWS.—Mr. Whipple's Dissolving Views at the Melodeon, Boston, are not like Panoramic Pictures sliding past you. You see no Mountains and hills in motion, as if they were passing in review before you. But whilst one is fading, as if a chemical gas were acting upon it, and blanching it out, another is forming, as if a hundred invisible artists were there working in the most beautiful colors to execute for your amazement another scene—whispering, etc., greatly to the annoyance of all around them who wish to learn. Such conduct is disgusting to every intelligent and virtuous observer. Will they for such insipid amusement continue their disturbance? Let such endeavor to render their presence a blessing and not an evil, and all will be well. They may, in many ways, profit themselves and the School by attending.

Should this free plan fail, it will be only on account of unnecessary disorder, in which case, what a disgrace to this ancient and honorable town.

What a loss to succeeding generations of the poor, by closing the Halls of this science against them.

What an occasion for raising up a set of aristocratic singers on the one hand, and of out door rowdies on the other.

Will the parents of our youth, our Ministers, superintendents and teachers, and all other benevolent and patriotic citizens, use their influence in favor of this free, large and useful School, and to ease the burden of the gentlemanly and able Instructor?

T. K.

(Correspondence of the Quincy Patriot)

BOSTON, April 18th, 1850.

Friend Green—After this long silence, I again write a few thoughts on the current matters of the day to you and your readers. Winter is

Oak Hall, Boston, is known throughout the country as a famous clothing establishment. Those visiting the city should not fail to call on Geo. W. Simmons, the gentlemanly proprietor, who will take pleasure in showing them his extensive range of stores.

PUB. Doc.—Our thanks are due to Hon. Horace Mann and Orrin Fowler for the transmission of important documents. We trust that the liberty and patriotism of '76 exists in their bosoms to go against Slavery.

WATER CURE JOURNAL.—The April number has reached us, the pages of which are richly stored with valuable matter pertaining to the character of the work.

MARRIED.

In this town, on the 10th inst., by the Rev. W. W. Dean, Mr. John Jacobs, to Miss. Marietta S. Wil-mouth.

DIED.

In this town, April 6th, Mrs. Sarah, wife of George Venier, aged 58 years.

Farewell, my bosom friend, Carewell,

Then last left us here, with God to dwell,

Why should we mourn, why do we sigh,

The spirit rests with God on high.

Farewell, my loving friend, adieu,

Then ever hast to me proved true,

I part with sorrow, grief and pain,

Yet know that we shall meet again.

God has decreed all things are right,

We'll take his word with pure delight,

Jesus has said that all must die,

But yet should dwell with God on high.

Farewell, my cherished friend, farewell,

Who can my griefs or sorrows tell,

Who can my joys and pains now share,

Where is my mother! where, oh where!

Why do I weep, why do I mourn,

Jesus has called thee to his home,

Her spirit rests with God above,

Where all is purity and love.

Farewell, yet hard it is to part,

We feel the anguish in our heart,

All things look sad around us here,

No mother comes our heart to cheer.

Sleep on dear mother, take thy rest,

Thy body's dead, thy spirit's blest,

We'll meet again with thee once more

Upon that blessed and happy shore.

When God shall call, and we must die,

We'll meet thee then with God on high;

God said that all to Heaven shall rise,

To those blest mansions in the skies.

[Communicated.

NOTICES.

To DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS IN MEDICINE, DR. WIT-TAT'S BALM OF WILD CHERRY.

This celebrated and infallible remedy for the cure of Consumption, Asthma, and Liver Complaint, was discovered some years ago. Since that time it has, by its own merits, been rapidly, surely, and safely working its way through the opposition of quacks and counterfeiters, until it has gained for itself a most enviable popularity, established itself in the confidence of intelligent and enlightened public, from the time of its first appearance.

The testimony of thousands who have been relieved and cured by this valuable article, will show that it is unequalled—at the head of all other medicines for the cure of diseases for which it is recommended. The genuine Dr. Witter's Balm of Wild Cherry is now for sale by duly appointed agents, and all respectable dealers in medicine, in all large cities and all important towns throughout the United States, Canada, and British provinces.

None genuine unless signed I. BUTTS ON THE WRAPPER.

Agents—Mrs. E. HAYDEN, Quincy; Oliver Perkins, Braintree.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor of the Nurseries at Hawthorn Grove, Dorchester (Mass.) is anxious to dispose of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES thereon, with a view to improvement of the ground the coming season.

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS,

and other FRUITS, embraces almost every species of American or Foreign origin, except, and is scarcely surpassed in size or variety of peculiarities. A special collection has been bestowed on the PEARS, and many thousands of thrifty vigorous trees, are now ready for transplantation.

EXTRA-SIZED TREES, with fruit buds, and well furnished with branches, and such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also—All the new varieties of PEARS, CHER-RIES, PLUMS, etc., and at rates less than is generally charged for novelties.

Trees for exportation and the home trade can be had from bearing trees, thereby ensuring correctness of homemaking.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experience of many years, will be made by the Proprietor, and which will seldom fail to please the correspondent.

HEAVEN.

There is no land the eye can trace,
No spot however dear,
Where man can fix a dwelling place,
And say my home is here.

The earthquake's voice may warning give,
The whirlwind sweep it clear,
Earth has no place where man can live,
And say my home is here.

The strongest tower may be o'erthrown,
That human hands can rear,
Man has no place to call his own,
And say my home is here.

The sun in hill the shaded glen,
The lightning flash can see,
There is no place on earth where men
Can say our home is here.

The deepest mine is no defence,
The fire damp slumbers near,
A breath may warn its tenants hence,
Man has no dwelling here.

But there's a place beyond the skies,
The Savior will prepare,
The pure in heart can lift their eyes,
And say our home is there.

A STICK OF TYPE.

A Stick of Type! what shot or shell
From War's grim camp hath half the power,
A Stick of Type! with this one thought,
That Freedom's Man's God given dozer?

That Stick of Type! hath more of might
Than warrior hosts or fortress walls,
And it shall batter towers to dust
That laugh at siege or cannon balls.

That Stick of Type! I see it break
The eldest of the blood built thrones,
And lift the yoke from millions, bowed
O'er dead-slave millions' bleaching bones.

That Stick of Type! Careering fleets
Before it idly flap their wings,
And bannered armies pass like chaff,
Grown hideous 'mong remembered things.

The Type! the Press! the living thought!
By steam and lightning sped abroad,
Shall conquer yet, and bring to men
The Freedom, Love and Truth of God!

THE FLAG OF OUR UNION.

BY GEORGE P. MORRIS.

"A song for our banner!"—The watchword recall
Which gave the Republic her station;

"United we stand—divided we fall!"—

It made and preserves us a nation!

The union of lakes—the union of lands—

The union of States none can sever—

The union of hearts—the union of hands—

And the Flag of the Union for ever

And ever!

The Flag of our Union for ever!

ANECDOTES.

A Yankee is never upset by the astonishing. He walks along the roads with his hands in his pockets, and the smoke of a cigar is seen among the mists of Niagara. One of the roads sauntered into the office of the lightning telegraph, and asked how long it would take to transmit a message to Washington. "Ten minutes," was the reply. "I can't wait," was the rejoinder.

A trifling sort of a fellow won the affections of the daughter of a bluff, honest Dutchman of some wealth. On asking the man for her, he opened with a romantic speech about his being "a poor young man," &c. "Yes, yes," said the old man. "I know all about it; but you ish a little too poor—you has no neither money nor character."

"I'm afraid that you do not practice much self-denial," said a person to a pretty miss. "Nay, but I do," said she. "For every day I fall in with pretty young men whom I want to kiss most sadly; but I deny myself that pleasure."

A Frenchman, stopping at a tavern, asked for Jacob. "There is no such person here," said the land lord. "Tis not a person I want, but the boy made warm wid de poker." "Well," answered mine host, "that is flip." "You are in de right sure, I mean Philip!"

"Mr. Brown, I owe you a grudge, remember that?" "I shall not be frightened then, for I never knew you to pay anything that you owed."

Snooks was advised to get his life insured. "Won't do it," said he; "it would just be my luck to live forever, if I should." Mrs. Snooks very meekly said, "Well, do not, my dear."

"Have you ever broke a horse?" inquired a horse jockey. "No, not exactly," replied Simon; "but I've broke three or four wagons."

"Why are you like an animal, my dear?" said a saucy lover, as he pulled Harriet into his lap. "I do not know."

"Why because you are handsomely bound?" "Indeed?" said Miss Harriet. "Why then am I like a law book?"

"Really I cannot tell."

"Because I'm bound in call."

— REMOVAL. —

THE subscriber takes this method to inform his customers and the public, that he has moved to the new building lately erected by Mr. Samuel Copeland, it being more commodious and better adapted to his business; and also, would tender his sincere thanks for the liberal share of patronage which he has received during the past year.

His former customers and the public generally are invited to call, where will be found a variety of Stoves, among which is the

New England Air-Tight,

embodiment, in the highest degree of perfection, every essential quality requisite for any latitude. This Stove presents itself externally in a plain dress, with just and admirable proportions, giving it the appearance of a chaste and tastefully made piece of Cabinet Furniture. Internally, the location and capacity of the Fire Chamber is such as to remove effectually the objections often made to Air-Tight Cook Stoves, for country use. The Oven proves itself to be precisely what its projectors intended it should be, viz: the largest and most perfect ever constructed in a family Stove. The Flues, upon which the great responsibility and reputation of a stove depends, differ from any ever before used, and are of such construction and capacity as to ensure the most perfect draught, without liability to fill up, and are easily kept clean. Nearly one hundred of this stove have been sold the past year, and all have given the utmost satisfaction.

Also—A variety of PARLOR, OFFICE and CYLINDER STOVES, together with a good assortment of TIN, BRITANIA, SHEET IRON and JAPANED Ware.

I tell you it will pay. Aside from the humanity of the thing, it is decidedly a matter of saving and a very important one, too, that all animals should be well sheltered and kept comfortably warm, and dry. Let me just ask you when you eat the most and the heartiest viands.

In the winter to be sure.

Exactly. Food is the fuel to the animal engine, and the colder, the more is required. It therefore follows that, if you keep your animals warm they will require so much less food.

My good John, this is rather a rotten shingle you have given me; your roof must have been very old by the look of these old shingles which have been thrown down.

Only fifteen years.

Well, it's a good deal of an item to have to renew a roof every fifteen or twenty years. No use in it at all, my good fellow.

Should like to know how to prevent it?

I'll tell you how; and if you will follow my directions your roof will last a century.

Gas tar?

Exactly. You read my paper, I see. Gas tar is one of the best paints you can use, and it is very cheap.

How is it put on?

Easily enough; any man can do it. Thus: it's already mixed, and of proper consistency for putting on without any further preparation.

Put on a heavy coat while the roof is dry and will not soak in; put legs to it as for a bench, say about a foot or eighteen inches high. Make one of these for about every sheep—three for a hundred would do better.

Not a bit of it.

Honor bright then. If you want your sheep to do well and especially your lambs, do this. Get a plank or slab about twelve feet long and a foot wide, put legs to it as for a bench, say about a foot or eighteen inches high. Make one of these for about every sheep—three for a hundred would do better.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

"You can have," said the clerk, with solemnity, "that box for ten thousand dollars."

Internally the Major felt astonished; outside, he was as cool as a cucumber—the price had gone "over his pile," and his expectations just nine thousand nine hundred and seventy-five dollars.

With a sang froid that sunk into the heart of the clerk, he said,

"Is that the highest priced jewelry you have in your store?"

The clerk said "it was, just then."

"Well," drawled the Major, waving his hand somewhat in the style of Julius Caesar, "this don't cost enough to suit me," and with a swing of grandeur he left the store.

That night, the clerk remarked to his employer, that one of the richest men in the world was in town, and he wondered how he felt!

(For the Quincy Patriot)

THE SINGING SCHOOL.

Mr. EDITOR—I have a few words to offer by way of reply to one question proposed by your correspondent, "T. K." which appeared in your paper of the 20th instant, under the caption of "Singing School," which communication, I hope, every citizen in Quincy has with it read attentively and ponder upon it. It is upon a subject that merits the attention of the citizens generally, who feel any interest in contributing to encourage and promote good order, or to raise the moral character of the town. Many questions are proposed and many truths told and valuable hints thrown out, which may be profitable if due notice is taken of them.

Now, for the question!—"Cannot Quincy—have a free, orderly, well conducted Singing School, in which the principles of this useful science can be taught to our rising youth?"—that is the question, and my answer is no! not under existing circumstances. And I will go further and say that we cannot have any orderly, well conducted association for the improvement of the public, generally or collectively, in any branch of science whatever. It has been the fact for many years, and it has been remarked by transit people, such as lecturers, concert singers and others who are traveling from one town to another, that the boys in Quincy were the most noisy, saucy and insolent of any town that they were ever in—that is, a portion of them were such; and my own experience convinces me that they were right. I never saw the like in any other village, and it is a melancholy fact that it is a growing evil; parents do not seem to be aware what these sons are about, as they stay at home more than formerly, and that affords them an opportunity to serve the devil more, who seems to be of late to be their chief instructor, if we may judge from their conduct. It is a fact not to be disputed, that there is no quiet at any meeting—it matters not what, whether it be "Singing School," Lycée, public or private lecture, concert or balls,—the meeting must be subjected to the annoyance of these low, mean, degraded, reckless scoundrels of boys, who are permitted for some cause, which to me is unacceptable, to be at large—and allowed to insult and annoy, any, and every one they please, either in the streets or the assemblage halls. And I am sorry to say that some of them are quite old boys, so old they would naturally assume to be styled young men, when their behavior would entitle them to the appellation of rowdies.

When these rowdies receive their just deserts from the police or some other authorities that should be in full operation, there will be no difficulty in supporting a well regulated Singing School, Lycée or Lecture. The idea that the public must suffer, that we can have no Singing School, no public assemblage, because we have a pack of reckless scamps of boys, who know nothing, nor care for nothing but make disturbance, is absurd—it is preposterous.

It does seem as though some measures ought to be started, whereby this disturbance of the Singing School should be prevented, to afford an opportunity for the peaceable, well-disposed part of the rising generation, who wish to assemble for the purpose of improvement or recreation, to enjoy without their being subjected to the annoyance of these marauders, who are deserving of nothing better than to be sent to the House of Correction or Penitentiary.

I would invite parents, and some respectable ones, too, to look after their sons, Singing School nights, and see what they are about; and it would not be amiss if some should look after their daughters, too. But pardon me, I hope I have not gone too far. I only wish to remind them that whispering in any public assembly is very annoying, particularly in Singing Schools. Judging from the little interest manifested by parents with regard to the disturbance at the Singing School, it is feared that they do not appreciate the efforts of the teacher nor the liberality of the friends of the School, who have contributed to defray the expense. Unless something is done to check the disturbance in and about the door of the Hall, very little, if any profit will be realized from the School; on the contrary, if good order and regulations are maintained it would prove, I think, without a doubt, one of the most useful and profitable schools we ever had in this town.

Its tendency has been to bring out and develop the talents for music which has become a very desirable object and a subject that commands the attention of the most accomplished and well regulated communities.

The City of Boston appropriates a larger amount of money for the support of Singers, alone, in their public schools, than all the town of Quincy appropriates for schooling. It was cheering to those friendly to the cause to witness the liberality of some of our citizens, in the attempt to raise funds for the purpose of trying the experiment. It seems now unreasonable that those who have a desire to be respectable and improve their minds and voices, should be deprived of the privilege afforded them by a set of reckless scamps, that should, and would be locked up in some House of Correction, if justice could but be dealt out to them.

It is desirable that the Selectmen would clothe some one or more with authority to preserve order, and not have it said that Quincy is the most unruly place in the vicinity—simply, because there is a few reckless, ungoverned and ungovernable rowdy boys here.

It was thought that by having a free school, most, if not all, of those rowdies, might be induced to join and attend the School, and thereby, they would be encouraged to have some regard for their reputation; but they are like the dog in the manger—that will neither eat the hay nor let the ox. They don't appear to have any regard for their reputation, no shame, no respect for themselves or any one else, their chief study and delight seems to be, to make all the disturbance they can, and do all the damage they can or, rather dare to do.

Several of the settees have already been designedly injured, and even ladies, adults, cannot feel safe without a protector by their side.

Parents and guardians, do think of it! Ye fathers of the town, or men of authority, do look to it! Visit our Singing School one evening, and be eye witness to the proceedings—their insults to the School insults the masters; and you will be convinced of the justice of these remarks.

I regret that I cannot close without an allusion, unfavorable to some who take their seats as singers, both male and female; they degrade themselves by their immodest demeanor—they mar the happiness of their teacher whose delight would be to admire, to praise, rather than censure. If silence is necessary anywhere it is in a Singing School. I do not doubt but that the greater part of the confusion among the singers is owing to their thoughtlessness; they don't seem to realize the importance of quiet. I cannot think that much of the noise is intended to annoy; be it as it may there should be less.

Let this School have the privilege of a few evenings quiet and good order, undisturbed, and it will be a rich treat to the parents or the benefactors of the School, to spend an evening with and hear them rehearse. Forgive me, this time, I have spun a longer yarn than I intended, when I commenced. If permitted, I shall, at future visits, and the universal satisfaction expressed is a sure sign that they will be greeted by a numerous auditory. Most of the songs have not been sung here by them on former occasions. Go early to get a seat.

RICHLAND ENTERTAINMENT. The original Harringtons will be here to-night, at the Town Hall. The crowded houses they received on their recent visits, and the universal satisfaction expressed is a sure sign that they will be greeted by a numerous auditory. Most of the songs have not been sung here by them on former occasions. Go early to get a seat.

CHOWDER. There is to be one of these epicurean compounds served up at the Hancock House, this evening.

BUILDING SITES. Read the advertisement about the sale of building lots on Tuesday next. As there stated, they are indeed picturesquely situated, and should receive the attention of purchasers, and especially of persons from Boston who may wish a pleasant country residence.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. At the annual meeting of this corporation, the following gentlemen were elected the Directors, viz:—H. H. Hunnewell, William Richardson, Nathaniel Whiting, William J. Walker, Francis B. Crowningshield, James W. Sever. Hon. F. B. Crowningshield has since been elected President. Only two of the old board were re-elected.

EXECUTION ORDERED. In the Executive Council of this State, it was unanimously voted that the sentence of Daniel H. Pearson, who killed his wife and two children, should be carried into effect, and Friday, July 26th, was fixed for the day of execution, which will take place in the jail yard at East Cambridge.

COURT AT DEDHAM. The three persons concerned in entering the jewelry store of E. C. Redfern, plead guilty to the indictments, and were each sentenced to two days solitary confinement and five years hard labor in the State Prison.

THE CULTIVATOR must necessarily take these soils as they are, and make the most of them by ascertaining the capabilities of each. Now, the first question is, how is he to cultivate these different soils, in order to insure the most profitable returns?

How is he to cultivate his sand hills and knolls, of pebbles and coarse gravel?

What is he to do with his plain land, of light and loamy soils, already exhausted by excessive cropping?

A SAD COMMENT. It is stated in Hunt's Magazine, from records kept during periods of twenty to forty years, that of one hundred persons who commence business in Boston, ninety-five at least die poor; that of the same number in New York, not two ultimately acquire wealth, after passing through the intermediate process of bankruptcy; while in Philadelphia the proportion is still smaller.

MYSTERIOUS. Several human skulls and other bones, apparently those of full grown persons, were lately found in an old vault by the workmen digging near the American House in Hanover street, Boston. The old building on this site was a tavern during the revolutionary war.

PUB. DOC. We are indebted to the Hon. Mr. Richards of the Senate, for a legislative document concerning the State Prison. He will accept our thanks for this attention, and we shall give it more notice hereafter. We received it too late to make a synopsis this week.

A GENEROUS PRESENT. We are gratified to learn that the pupils at Weymouth Landing, under the care of Mr. Jonathan French Jr., formerly principal of the Centre School in this village, have presented him with a gold pencil and pen, and their parents with a purse to purchase a gold watch.

REAL ESTATE by Auction. WILL be sold by public auction on TUESDAY, April 30th, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, on Washington street, nearly opposite the Universalist Church, in Quincy, four Building Lots, pleasantly situated on rising ground, commanding a fine view of Boston harbor, canal, town, river and Quincy village, being in the Center School District, and within sight of, and but a short distance from six churches, Post Office, Printing Office, Bank and Old Colony Railroad Center Depot. Two of the lots join and are under a high state of cultivation. There is on them from seventy-five to one hundred choice Fruit Trees, Current Bushes, Strawberries, &c.

SOLD Lots present a rare chance for a country or city resident, that cannot be equalled south of Boston, as the cars stop almost every hour of the day and evening.

TERMS liberal and made known at the sale.

ALSO—Immediately after the above sale, Lot No. 9, as marked on the plan of which the above lots were a part, belonging to EBENZER ADAMS.

GEORGE H. FRENCH, Auctioneer.

CHANCE for Bargains. THE subscriber in consequence of ill health will dispose of her entire Stock at prices that cannot fail to suit.

THE trial of Dr. James R. Smith for the murder of Mary Bean, is now going on in Saratoga, N.Y. The body of Miss Bean was found in a brook, near the Doctor's residence.

The Governor of this State, has appointed the 27th day of May next, for the ninth trial to elect a Representative to the thirty-first Congress of the United States, in District No. 4.

NOTICES.

Temperance Meeting.

Mr. John F. Gordis, a reformed Sailor, who relates a part of his experience, will speak, in accordance with the unanimous vote of the large meeting of our citizens at that time, finish the account of that sad experience on Intemperance and lecture upon the subject, in the Town Hall, next Thursday evening, May 2d, at half past 7 o'clock.

A collection will be taken for his benefit.

that all soil, at the present time, consists principally of undecomposed mineral and vegetable matter. It will follow, therefore, that in order to bring out the whole power of a soil and give it the greatest fertility, entire decomposition of both mineral and vegetable matter, must necessarily take place, and this can be effected in no other way than by an increase of temperature—that is, by a thorough combustion of the vegetable matter contained in it, and a consequent decomposition of more or less of the mineral part.

Unitarian Fair. All ladies interested in the coming "Fair" are solicited to meet at the residence of Rev. William P. Lunt upon May 2d, at 3 o'clock P.M. Per order of Secretary.

Testimony of the most distinguished Physicians as to the virtues and efficacy of

DR. CORBETT'S HIGHLY CONCENTRATED SYRUP OF SARSAPARILLA.

The FORMULA of this invaluable Preparation has been laid before many of the different Medical Societies in New England, and has received in every case their especial commendation. It has been acknowledged as a most valuable and efficacious antidote yet known!

Thoroughly cleansing the Blood—Enduring Sore-faith Taint and affording the most healing qualities to Diseased Lungs, & giving to the consumptive Restoration to Health.

The celebrated Surgeon and Physician, Dr. Valentine Mott, President of the New York Academy of Medicine, has given his especial notice to the accurate Preparation of Dr. Corbett's, and permits us to refer to him as to its virtues.

THIS IS TESTIMONY MOST ABSOLUTE but in Boston, other distinguished Physicians have also afforded their approval of this singularly efficacious medicine.

Such as Dr. J. C. Warren, Dr. J. W. Warren, Dr. Geo. Howard, Dr. John Jeffries, Dr. J. V. C. Smith and others; many of whom have given their names in writing in favor of its salutary powers.

Alexander B. Mott, Esq., Druggist of New York, son of the distinguished Dr. Valentine Mott, writes us under date Nov. 1, 1848—

"The Physicians of this city who have made use of Corbett's Syrup of Sarsaparilla, express themselves pleased with its effects and are constantly ordering it."

These are credentials the public may rely upon!

It is Sold by EDWARD BRINLY & Co., Druggists, Boston, Sole Proprietors; and their general Agents in the United States and Canadas.

REMEDY FOR BRONCHITIS.

Mr. Seth W. Fowle

Dear Sir: There are so many quick medicines at the present time, and each one has more or less certificates from real or imaginary individuals, that I have for some time had doubts of the properties of giving in my testimony in regard to the medical qualities, I may, perhaps, be the means of saving some similarly afflicted. I therefore cheerfully add my testimony to the medicines that I know have done me great good. I have been afflicted with the Bronchitis for a number of years, and by the use of a couple of bottles of

WISTAR'S BALM WILD CHERRY.

I am happy to say that I am almost free from the above troublesome disease.

It should be the means of saving even one of my fellow beings, from that most troublesome and painful disease, (Bronchitis) I shall be fully paid for my trouble in writing the above communication.

Respectfully yours,

B. COVERT, Vocalist.

Form of Covert & Dodge,

We take pleasure in transferring the above certificate of Mr. Covert, in favor of the curative properties of Wistar's Balm of Wild Cherry, to our columns.

Mr. Covert (of the firm of Covert & Dodge, Vocalists) has been long and favorably known in this city, and vicinity as a vocalist of rare attainments. We have watched with painful anxiety his declining health from the disease of which he speaks and have almost despaired of his recovery—yes, to the surprise of Dr. Wistar's Balm, he is now, greatly to our surprise, enjoying most excellent health. [New England Washingtonian, Boston.]

None genuine unless signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

POETRY.

DISUNION.

Ay, shout! 'tis the day of your pride,
Ye despots and lords of the earth!
Teach your words the American name to deride,
And to rattle their letters in mirth.
Ay, shout! for the League of the free
Is about to be shattered to dust,
And the torn branches fall from the vigorous tree,
Wherein Liberty placed her last trust.
Shout, shout! for more firmly established will be
Your thrones and dominions beyond the blue sea.

Leigh on! for such folly supreme
The world has yet never beheld;
And ages to come will the wild story seem
A tale by antiquity swelled.
For nothing that Time has up built,
And set in the annals of crime,
So stupid in folly, so writhed in guilt,
Darkens sober tradition or rhyme.
It will be like the fable of Exodus' fall,
A by-word of mocking and horror to all.

We mad! who would raze out your name
From the lege of the proud and the free,
And separate, ideal sovereignty claim,
Like a lone wave flung off from the sea;
Ob, pause! ere you plunge in the chasm
That yawns in your dangerous way;
Free freedom convulsed with one terrible spasm,
Desert you forever and aye!
Pause! think! ere the earthquake astonish your Souls.
And the thunder of war through your green valleys rolls.

Good God! what a title, what name
Will history give to your crime!
In the deepest abyss of dishonor and shame
Ye will writh till the last hour of Time.
As braggarts who forged their own chains,
Pulled down what their forefathers built,
And tainted the blood in their children's young veins.

With the poison of slavery and guilt;
And Freedom's bright heart be hereafter ten-fold,
For your folly and fall mere disengaged and cold.

What flag shall float over the fires,
And the smoke of your paroxide war,
Instead of the stars and broad stripes of your sires?
A lone, pale, dim, mist-covered star,
With the treason hiding its glow,
And its waning crest close to the sea;
Will the Eagle's wing shelter and shield you? ah,
no!

That wing shelters only the Free.
Mislead it, disguise it, boast, brag, as ye will,
Ye are traitors, misled by your mad leaders still.

Torn, torn men! Cast down in your might
The Anarchs that sit at the helm!

Steer, steer your proud ship from the gulf which the night

Of treason and terror o'erwhelms.

Torn back! From your mountains and glens,
From your lakes, from the rivers and sea,
From forest and precipice, cavern and den,
Where your forefathers bled to be free,
From the graves where those glorious forefathers lie,
The warning re-echoes; "Turn back, ere ye die!"

COURTING DAYS.

A Yankee had a courting went,
A sprightly lass to see,
Determined quite to marry her,
If they could both agree.

Oh! the courting days are the happy days,
The courting days for me!

Boys Jonathan, "to break the ice,"
"Miss Nancy, how do you do?"
"Pretty well, I thank you, thir!" quoth she.
"Mister Cornthwaite, how are you?"

"A very fine day!" quoth Jonathan;
"Twas all that he could say;
And Nancy thought, as he twirled his thumbs,
He'd surely stay all day.

The sighing swain was si a stand
What he should say or do;
Quoth he, "Du yu like music, ma'am?"
"Quoth Nancy, "Yuh! don't you?"

"Tis almost night," thought Jonathan,
"And this will never do;
What shall I say? I have it now—
The beauty of the view!"

He gave a short convulsive wheeze,
To make his voice quite clear,
And said, as he leaned o'er the window sill,
It looks—rather green—out here!"

Now, with her lover to agree
On the beauty of the view,
"Yuh, thir!" quoth she, "and it seemed to me
It looks—rather green—in here-to!"

ANECDOTES.

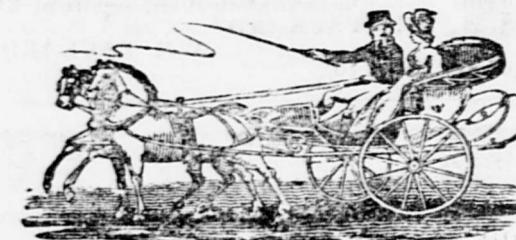

"A smart young student of anatomy remarked to his sister that the reason there were so many old maids in the world is owing to their tight lacing, which so hardened their hearts as to make them impenetrable to the shafts of Cupid. And the reason there are so many old bachelors, retorted the sister, is because of their tight strapping—they cannot get on their knees to declare their passion."

While a certain Representative was delivering a speech in Congress, some one observed to him that the members were nearly all absent. "I am not speaking for them," he said, "but for posterity." "And," replied the other, "if you continue much longer, posterity will be present to hear you."

"I was once a minister," "because I imagined that the principal care of mankind was their souls. I afterwards became a doctor, and I am now a lawyer, for I know they care most for their property."

P. LOW'S UNION HOT AIR *

Cooking Stove and Fuel Saver.

THIS is a most beautiful and extraordinary Cooking Stove. The even and regular application of the heat to the Oven, gives this Stove all the advantages of a brick Oven—while at the same time the boiler holes are so constructed that the heat is immediately applied to the boilers from the fire pit, which makes this stove the most complete and finished Air Tight Cook Stove in America.

AS A COAL COOKING STOVE.

it is just suited for the use of families in cities and villages, and will perform the cooking of a family of from 2 to 8, 10 or 20 persons with certainty and despatch. The fire-chamber is constructed of a size, form and depth, to burn coal with the greatest freedom and economy. WOOD may be used with equal advantage by simply dispensing with the brick lining of the fire-chamber.

A SUMMER APPARATUS

is attached to the front, affording, of itself, ample convenience for light summer work, without the unpleasant effects and expense of heating up the main body of the stove; it may also be used at the same time that the rest of the stove is occupied, greatly adding to its value, and rendering it altogether the most efficient Cooking Stove for the class of families for whom it is expressly designed, ever yet invented.

Any person, who will give this stove a fair trial will be convinced of its superiority for ECONOMY, CONVENIENCE and DURABILITY, over any other Air-Tight Cooking Stove.

Its price brings it within the means of all families who want a good stove.

A pamphlet containing a description and directions for fitting up and using this Stove is furnished, gratis, to every purchaser.

These Stoves of the different sizes may be examined at the

MISCELLANY.

THE BERKSHIRE PIG.

"The fact is, gentlemen," said one of a party who were enjoying themselves in a private room over a glass of wine, and talking politics, "there are mighty few who know how the State of Louisiana was carried by the Whigs during the last Presidential campaign."

"How was it?" asked the party.

"Well, I'll tell you," said the speaker, who had a sly twinkling of humor in his eye. "During the campaign of '48, when the prominent advocates of Democracy and Whiggery were canvassing the state, one of the distinguished men of each party met by appointment at a small village, where the people were nearly equally divided in politics. The Democrat spoke after the Whig, and it was the general opinion that the Democrat had carried the day.

"After he had concluded his speech the people were about to disperse, when a tall, raw-boned, ugly looking customer, got up on the stand and said,—"Gentlemen, before you disperse I want to say a word or two in reply to that last gentleman that talked." At first the crowd commenced hissing and hooting, to put him down, but he wasn't one of the kind to stay put.

"Fellow citizens," shouted the stranger, in a stentorian voice, "I will introduce you to me as a Kentuckian. [Shouts of hurrah for Kentucky.] They say Rome was once saved by the cracklin' of geese; but I don't think the hissin' of any of you here will save Louisiana, or elect old Zack!" This speech was received with rounds of applause and shouts of laughter. He had won the crowd over on his side. They perceived at once that he was a character, and they became anxious to hear him.

"Fellow-citizens," continued the Kentuckian, "I want a chance, if you will give it to me, to put the gentleman that last talked to you about General Cass, through a course of 'prouts'." [Laughter, and cries of go on.]

Here the stranger put both hands in his coat pockets and drew out of one the Cleveland Plaindealer, and out of the other the Nashville Union, and with a sort of serio-comic expression of expression of countenance, said: "Fellow-citizens, you mustn't be down on me because my talk is like sawdust. I have been endowed, and the magnificent career of usefulness and of blessedness which has been opened before him; and resolving, with one all-concentrating and all-hollowing vow, that he will live true to the noblest capacities of his nature! If aught can be nobler or sublimer than this, it is the life that fulfills the vow. Such a young man reverences the divine skill and wisdom by which his physical frame has been so fearfully made; and he keeps it pure and clean, as a fit temple for the living God. For every indulgence of appetite that would enervate the body, or dull the keen sense, or cloud the luminous brain, he has a "Get thee behind me!" so stern and deep, that the balked Satan of temptation sinks from before him, in shame and despair. If obliged to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, or by the sweat of his brain, he is not "slothful in business." Fired with energy himself, he energizes all around him. He is a Leyden jar always charged to a premium; and whenever he comes in contact with dead things, or lifeless men, he emits a spark so potent that they are electrized into energy. Holding punctuality among the major virtues, he is ever true to the appointed place and hour; and as he goes and comes, men set their watches by him, as though he were a clock-face of the sun, and moved by solar machinery. In selecting his vocation for a livelihood, he abjures every occupation, and every profession, however lucrative they may be, or however honorable they may be falsely deemed, if, with his own weak, they do not also promote the combasket to get the pig. Between Bird's and Martin's, Sam Smith, who was a great quiz, kept a little grocery, and seeing Bob coming post haste on his master's horse, old Tom, with the basket on his arm, he sang out, "hallo, Bob, where are you going in such a hurry this morning?" "I is gwine to Massa Doctor Martin's to get Massa Tom's Buckshur pig, what massa doctor promise massa Tom de las' time he shod he hos," said the negro, as he reined in his animal. "Well, Bob, you must stop as you come back and let me see the pig." "Dat I will, massa Sam; da' I will," and away he went, at the top of "old Tom's speed." In less than an hour Bob returned with a genuine swine, and alighting at the grocery, he lifted the cover of the basket, and to the astonished gaze of the grocery man, who imagined the Berkshire to be something more than a mere hog, exhibited a very beautiful specimen of a jet black pig. An idea struck Sam Smith to play a joke on Bob, and knowing his propensity to imbibe, told him to go in the grocery and get a dram. While Bob was gone, Sam Smith ran round the back of the house, and got a little black pup nigh about the same height, and took the pig out of the basket and put the pup in. When Bob came out and mounted his pony, Sam Smith handed him the basket, and off he went. On arriving at home the blacksmith asked him if he had got the pig. "Yes, massa, and a werry fine pig he is too," said Bob, lifting up the cover; "black as a coal," when to the utter astonishment of Bob and Bird, there lay a little black curly puppy. "Is that a Berkshire pig?" asked the blacksmith in amazement; "why it is a pup, not a pig!" "Bless de Lord," said Bob, "he be pig when I put him in the basket, but he change to pup!" "Take him back sir," said Bird, highly indignant, "and tell Dr. Martin that I don't want to be fooled with his puppies, and if he don't want to give me a Berkshire pig, to say so."

Bob started back, and, naturally enough, stopped at the grocery to relate his mishap to Sam Smith, who heard him out with a countenance expressive of wonder, at the same time doing his best to control his increasing desire to burst into fits. "Well, get down Bob," said the grocer, "and take another dram." Bob didn't require a second invite, and while he was getting his "bald face," the grocer took the pup from the basket, and put back the pig. "Massa Sam," said Bob, coming out to mount his horse, "I am mighty obfuscated 'bout dis pig. Fust I tink him pig, I know he is pig fast, but den I know he is pup too. Aint you certain, Massa Sam, he was pig fast?" asked Bob, as he mounted his crittur. "I'll swear to it," replied Smith, and away Bob rode for the doctor's.

On arriving at the house, Bob delivered his message, but the doctor seeming somewhat incredulous as to the truth of the story, Bob, with a flourish of insulted veracity, opened the lid of the basket, when lo! there was the identical pig that he had started with. Bob stood transfixed, and with eyes protruding, and mouth open, remarked, "for God, taint no use, Massa, he be pup or pig, jus' as he pleases." The crowd became convulsed with laughter, and gave the Kentuckian three cheers. The fellow was hired to tell the same story in the democratic parishes, which he did with such powerful effect that the Whigs carried the state. —New Orleans Picayune.

THOUGHTS FOR A YOUNG MAN.
The following excellent extract is from a work of great merit, the author of which is the Hon. Horace Mann, the worthy Representative to Congress from this District.

"Let me ask whether, among all the spectacles which earth presents, and which angels might look down upon with an ecstasy too for utterance, is there one fairer and more enraptured to the sight than that of a young man, just fresh from the Creator's hands, and with the unspent energies of the coming eternity wrapped up in his bosom, surveying and recounting in the solitude of his closet or in the darkness of midnight gifts with which he has been endowed, and the magnificent career of usefulness and of blessedness which has been opened before him; and resolving, with one all-concentrating and all-hollowing vow, that he will live true to the noblest capacities of his nature! If aught can be nobler or sublimer than this, it is the life that fulfills the vow. Such a young man reverences the divine skill and wisdom by which his physical frame has been so fearfully made; and he keeps it pure and clean, as a fit temple for the living God. For every indulgence of appetite that would enervate the body, or dull the keen sense, or cloud the luminous brain, he has a "Get thee behind me!" so stern and deep, that the balked Satan of temptation sinks from before him, in shame and despair. If obliged to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, or by the sweat of his brain, he is not "slothful in business." Fired with energy himself, he energizes all around him. He is a Leyden jar always charged to a premium; and whenever he comes in contact with dead things, or lifeless men, he emits a spark so potent that they are electrized into energy. Holding punctuality among the major virtues, he is ever true to the appointed place and hour; and as he goes and comes, men set their watches by him, as though he were a clock-face of the sun, and moved by solar machinery. In selecting his vocation for a livelihood, he abjures every occupation, and every profession, however lucrative they may be, or however honorable they may be falsely deemed, if, with his own weak, they do not also promote the common weal; and he views the idea with a deep religious abhorrence, that anything can advance the well-being of himself which involves the ill-being of others. However meager his stock in trade, if he engages in business, he will not seek to enlarge it by entering conscience and honor in his books under the head of "Merchandise;" nor will he begin the sale of goods to customers, by selling his soul to Satan. If he ever ventures to embark on the perilous sea of politics, he steers his course by the eternal lights in the skies; and not by the Will-o'-the-wisps, or by any meteor glare, which popular fermentations, or party heats, may engender. He labors earnestly for all the means of health, comfort, and improvement, but scorns the parade and ostentations of wealth; shuns pomp and poverty with equal solicitude; and in a figure, if not in a literal sense, he avoids those streets of our cities where cholera rages and fevers consume, and also those other streets of Fashion and Pride where the prevailing epidemic is an ossification of the heart. Holding an affection of saintliness to be the worst of wickedness, he does not, like Pilate, take water and wash his hands, when about to consume a deed that blackens and defiles his soul. The locks and bolts and bars, by which men seek to secure their property, have no relation to him; for the nearer he is brought into contact with another's goods or gold, the more he is filled with an opposite polarity; and a fathoming, a mill, an infinitesimal, of another man's wealth, would burn his palms with so fierce a heat, that red-hot balls would be more tolerable. The honor of man is holy, the chastity of woman is thrice holy, in his keeping. When he has acquired that golden means of property which carries its possessor out of the temptations of want, without carrying him into the temptations of wealth; and which, as a patrimony for his children, will furnish and not blast the vigor that is in them, he leaves the money-making treadmill, and betakes himself to some walk of public usefulness most congenial to his taste;—either to adorn literature by his genius, or to advance science by his studies or to organize charities for supplying the privations of sense, or relieving the loss of sanity or to combine and strengthen the conservative and progressive forces of civilization; or to combat, hand to hand, with some of those terrific monsters that infest society,—ignorance, bigotry, intemperance, slavery or war,—which need some hunter mightier than Nimrod for their extirpation. Or, if he still continues to gather in the golden harvests of wealth, he opens a set of books with heaven, becoming the Lord's steward for men's redemption from suffering and crime, and laying up his treasures where moth, nor rust, nor thieves can approach them. He is so passionate a lover for the Fine Arts, that he discovers diviner forms of beauty, and more celestial harmonies of coloring, than mortal sculptor or painter ever dreamed of. Not a cultured imagination alone, but reason, conscience, religion, all have taught him that the finest and most elegant of all the arts, earthly or supernal, is to paint smiles and ruby joys upon the wan cheek of suffering infancy; to quench the demon-fire of passion that blazes from the eye of precocious wantonness, and kindle in its stead the serene light that radiates from a fount of inward purity to hang round and pre-occupy the chambers of the juvenile mind with all types and ranges of loveliness and excellence, and to build up all the glorious faculites of the soul, as in colossal architecture, to some nearer resemblance to the Divine Original. Reason, conscience, religion, all have taught him that he who crowds the wall of his own dwelling, or the city's ample galleries, with the painting and statuary of all the great masters, while orphanage sinks to ruin around him, in default of Christian care, and while all the hideous images of depravity and shame are daily and hourly frescoed into the souls of lost, abandoned childhood, only proves with what daubs and impostures and caricatures the walls of every mansion in his own soul are covered. Reason, conscience, religion, all have taught him that when the starving babe shall no longer wail for sustenance upon the starving mother's breast; when blasphemy and obscenity shall no longer be uttered with the infantile lullaby with which the intreperate father or mother lulls infancy to sleep; when parental wickedness shall no longer teach falsehood to the youthful tongue, and theft and violence to the youthful hand; when the infinite woes and agonies of earth, which its superfluous wealth and its wasted time might so easily prevent, shall cease to be,—then may opulence and taste and leisure devote their time and means to galleries of art and saloons

a people after the most dignified fashion! You have all seen that inscrutable dispensation known by the name of the "dignified gentleman," an embodied (dignity) which society is apt not only to tolerate but worship: a person who innately the stale common-places of conversation with the awful precision of one bringing down to the valleys of thought the awful precision of one bringing down to the valleys of thought the bright truth plucked on its summits; who is so profoundly deep and painfully solid on the weather, the last novel, or some other nothing of the day; who is impressively shocked if your eternal gratitude does not repay him for the trite information he consumed your hour in imparting; and who, if you insinuate that his calm, contented, imperturbable stupidity is preying upon your patience, instantly stands upon his dignity, and puts on a face.

Yet this man, with just enough knowledge to raise himself from the insignificance of a "dunce to a hero," is still in high favor even with those whose admiration he checks and chills. Why? Because he has, all say, "so much dignity of a gentleman!" The poor, bright, good-natured man, who has done well in his power to be agreeable, joins in the cry of praise, and feignly regrets that nature has not adorned him, too, with daintiness as a robe, so that he likewise might freeze volatility in respect, and be held up as a model for all daintiness to imitate. This dignity, which so many view with reverential despair, must have swelled "two at a birth," with that unique vanity mentioned by Coleridge, which keeps itself alive by sucking the claws of its own self-importance.—E. P. Whipple.

(For the Quincy Patriot.) A WORD TO "MAJORITY" OF VOTERS AT THE APRIL MEETING.

The singular action taken by this town on the Report of the School Committee at the April meeting, deserves to be recorded on the same page with the vote by which the town refused to pay the expenses of the public funeral of the Hon. John Quincy Adams. It is to be hoped that the "sober second thought" of the people which led to the reconsideration of that vote, will suggest a more enlightened policy to guide the future action of the town in relation to our public schools.

The powers of the School Committee are derived from the law, and their duties are enjoined by it, their authority cannot be restricted, nor their compensation diminished, by any act of the town.

The town chooses them; when chosen the law governs them. Mass. School System, see page 124.

The law requires the Committee, annually, to make a detailed report of the condition of the school schools in town, which report shall contain such statements and suggestions in relation to the schools as the committee shall deem proper to promote the interests thereof. 16-240.

No jurisdiction or control over this Report is given to the town, they may accept it in testimony of their approval; but they have no authority to reject it, or to modify it. The law points out the path which the report must take;—it must be read in open town meeting, or be printed in the use of the inhabitants to be deposited in the office of the Town Clerk, and a copy of it be transmitted by the Committee to the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. This report, you recollect, few measures or propose to abolish old ones, but it has no legal force to make them binding, except by an authoritative act of the town.

Now it is a plain case that the "majority" at the April meeting had their hands well upon the school Committee's report, had the Committee been governed by the votes of the town, and returned the report to the Secretary's office as it was modified, and altered by those votes, the town would have forfeited its claims to the State School, and for the present year. But the Committee returned the Report as it was prepared by themselves, not as it came mutilated from town meeting, and so doing have secured to the town its proportion of the school fund.

ONE OF THE MINORITY.

SINGING SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR. I concur in the general views of your correspondent Justice of last week. It is true that every gathering even for religious purposes in the Lyceum and Town Hall are disturbed by rude boys and under young men. What is the cause?

Is it an evil that can be removed by severe inveigle and denunciation? Surely not. The evil is too deep and wide-spread. Parents are the authors of these disturbances. Do parents speak to their children kindly and respectfully? Do they not speak to them as the masters to their slaves? Do not parents first of all subdue all feelings of self-respect and independence by a despotic sway in their families? Do parents set their children good examples of temperance, prudence, industry, they live moral and religious lives? Let Justice expose and condemn the parents as fearless as she the children and I venture to say his words will take effect—at least he will assail the author of the grievances of which he complains.

I rejoice to perceive a growing taste for music in this town, and hope Justice will fulfill his promise of discussing the comparative merits of free and school schools. He will serve the social and moral interests of the community. Music softens and refines the soul, and I know of no simpler and effective means of touching the hearts of the turbulent boys, by opening a free school to them. The experiment is now being tried under the direction of a competent teacher—abating little for the childlessness of some of his talk to the boys and girls rearing order—and is successful beyond my expectation.

JUSTICE & MERCY.

TOWN MEETING.

At a town Meeting in Quincy, on Monday, 29th, the following was the result of the ballotin for a County Commissioner.

Whole number of votes. 75
Samuel P. Lord of Duxbury. 56
Fisher A. Kingsbury of Weymouth 19

At a second meeting held the same day, William S. Morton was chosen Moderator.

Voted—To accept the Report of the Selectmen in widening and straightening School Street.

Voted—To indefinitely postpone the third article in the warrant relating to the nomination of School Committee in the District, previous to the annual March Meeting.

Voted—That the meeting be dissolved.

COME ONE! COME ALL! Dodge is in Town the inimitable, the comic, the mirth-provoking Dodge has arrived—and gives one of his side-splitting Concerts this Evening, in the Town Hall, with grand collection of some of his most favorite songs. "We are all a Dodge-dodge-dodge-dodge"—is the cry among the friends of this universal favorite of the public. Come early, all, in order to secure seats. For further particulars see advertisement:

(Correspondence of the Quincy Patriot.)

BOSTON, MAY 1st, 1850.

Friend Green—The mild and genial weather of the last fortnight has caused a great change in the face of nature, and a corresponding one in the countenances of our people. We have had but comparatively few of those cold, penetrating and deathful East winds, which make a residence on the coast of New England in the Spring so disagreeable.

The Common (rus in urbe)—is fast coming forth to newness of life and beauty. It does one's soul good to visit it. The green grass, the trees, now uttering their leaves, the pond, the fresh and invigorating air, groups of boys and girls, plying together or wandering about, giving vent to their glad and innocent hearts,—all these things are "a delight to me."

During the past week a bill has passed the House and Senate noiselessly, and with hardly a passing notice from the Press, which it seems to me, is full of consequence to Boston and its vicinity. A Railroad has been chartered, which starting from the foot of Summer street in Boston, and crossing the South Boston flats on a pile bridge, proceeds from thence in a south-westerly direction until it forms a junction with the Norfolk County Railroad in Dedham. From Dedham the route is over roads already chartered through Blackstone, Hartford and other towns to Fishkill on the Hudson. It is called the Great Midland Railroad.

On the side opposite Fishkill is Newburgh, the northern terminus on the Hudson of the Erie Railroad. The Erie Rail road passing through the southern counties of New York, and very near the northern tier of counties in Pennsylvania, has its western terminus in Dunkirk on Lake Erie.

Language, adequately describing the trade and commerce of the states bordering on the lakes—its past growth and prospects of future increase would seem to those unacquainted with the facts, the language of hyperbole and fiction.

I will in some future communication array these facts before your readers that they may see I am not extravagant in my assertions—and that they may also see evidence of the preponderating influence which those states must exercise in the future councils of the Union.

It is proposed to reach and participate in this great trade and commerce by a third route—(The Great Western and Ogdensburg being the other two.) This is one of the great objects contemplated by the friends of this road. But a second of no slight importance is us, follows:—The Erie Railroad is easy of access from the coal fields of Pennsylvania, so that ere long, it is believed, coal will be brought to our doors at a far less cost than at present. This will be opened a new avenue to wealth—new facilities of intercommunication among the people, and thereby increased facilities for promoting the physical, social, mental, political and religious condition of the country.

The reception of Mr. Webster, last Monday, was a cold and unfeeling ceremony. Mr. B. R. Curtis bade him welcome in formal and legal language. The reply of Mr. Webster was brief, studied, grave, and important, reiterating the most obnoxious sentiments of the speech delivered in the Senate a few weeks ago, and boldly avowing that he should take no steps backward.

Mr. Webster has spent the best years of his life in a vigorous opposition to the measures of the Democratic party. He has fought them with Timorous power and perseverance. He has granted nothing and denied everything. Against their most vulnerable point—their encouragement and support of Slavery—he has directed all the forces of his great intellect speaking in language that will be read with delight and admiration, by the latest generation of mankind. His speeches have been the grand armory and magazine of the Whig party, so that ere long, it is believed, coal will be brought to our doors at a far less cost than at present. This will be opened a new avenue to wealth—new facilities of intercommunication among the people, and thereby increased facilities for promoting the physical, social, mental, political and religious condition of the country.

The experiment is now being tried under the direction of a competent teacher—abating little for the childlessness of some of his talk to the boys and girls rearing order—and is successful beyond my expectation.

And now, in his old age, he sees the Whig party in the ascendant in the national councils, and responsible for the right direction of the government—that they too must at last grapple with the monster sin of Slavery which now reigns so rampant and athwart the path of Christian civilization. What now becomes of his abolition sentiments with which he has discharged all his political speeches for the last dozen years? Laid up for future use it may be. What becomes of his magnificent boast, so often paraded as a motto in Whig papers, that outside of the Whig party there is no light by which the ship of state could be safely guided? Is the doctrine of non-intervention laid down in Whig charts? General Cass easily pointed out this doctrine, even before the political tempest which Mr. Webster powerfully contributed to raise, and is now so anxious to allay, he boldly avowed it, and threw himself gallantly upon the magnanimity and intelligence of the people. He was defeated by a party, which exhausted the force of language in reproaching his sentiments.

But lo! in a few months, Mr. Webster very coolly takes his position by the side of General Cass's Friend in California being hard run for paper, took a piece of chalk and wrote a letter home by a late steamer on a cellar door. Having a postscript to add, he set it on a shingle. Whether he "plunked" the postage, we have not learned. In a certain bathing-house, not a thousand miles from Phillip's Beach, was this notice: "People are requested not to use any thing that are in the bathing-house, except the boarders." The grammar of the above is equal to that of the menagerie man: "This, ladies and gentlemen, is the celebrated baboon, which picks nuts with its tail, which is its natural food."

QUINCY PATRIOT.

real Cass. How he got there the Lord only knows, but to ordinary mortals it seems passing strange and reconcilable with no hypothesis other than that of blind and unscrupulous devotion to party in past times. And if so, can his professions be relied on? But the decree has gone forth, and the Whigs of Massachusetts must bow their heads and be silent. Whoever does not "right about face" instantaneously must be regarded as an enemy to the Whig party. To speak a word against the God-like Daniel is blasphemy!

Yours, affectionately,

JUNIUS.

"THE POULTRY BOOK:—A Treatise on Breeding, and general management of Domestic Fowls—with numerous original descriptions, and portraits from life. By John C. Bennett, M. D., Physician and Surgeon."

The above is the comprehensive title of the most complete and thorough work, on one of the most interesting subjects before the public at the present time. No person who is desirous of gaining information, either from curiosity or for practice, in relation to the subject treated in this book, will fail to find all that he could wish. The Domestic Fowl, the Turkey, Ducks, Pigeons, Food of Poultry, Fattening, Breeding Fowls, Laying, Poultry-Houses, Diseases, and other branches of the subject are treated of in a masterly and attractive manner. Not the least excellent feature of the book is the number and excellence of the illustrations of the different species of fowls. A beautiful representation of the Poultry-House of Colonel T. H. Perkins, faces the title, and fully introduces the reader at once into the beauties of the Book.

The Formula of this invaluable Preparation has been held but by many of the different Medical Societies in New England, and has received in every case their especial commendation. It has been acknowledged as the "most powerful antidote yet known." Thoroughly cleansing the Blood! Eradicating Scrofulous Taint and affording the most healing qualities to Diseases Longest and giving to the consumptive Restoration to Health!

The celebrated Surgeon and Physician, Dr. Valentine Mott President of the New York Academy of Medicine, has given his especial notice to the accurate Preparation of Dr. Corbett's, and permits us to refer to him to its virtues.

This is TESTIMONY MOST AMPLIEST but in Boston, other distinguished Physicians have also afforded their approval of this singularly efficacious medicine. Such as—Dr. J. W. Warren, Dr. J. W. Warren, Dr. George Ward, Dr. John Jeffries, Dr. V. C. Smith and others, many of whom have given their names writing to the editor of Medical Record.

ALEXANDER B. MOTT, Esq., Physician of New York, son of the distinguished Dr. Valentine Mott, writes us under date Nov. 1, 1848:—

"The Physicians of this city who have made use of Corbett's Syrup of Sarsaparilla, express themselves pleased with its effects and are constantly ordering it."

These are credentials the public may rely upon; for they are those of the highest authority and the largest experience in Medical Science and research.

THE SYRUP is sold by EDWARD BRINLEY & CO., Boston, Sole Proprietors; and their general appointed Agents in the United States and Canada.

Agencies—Mrs. E. HAYDEN, Quincy; Oliver Perkins, Braintree.

POETRY.

MOVE ON.

The march of life should never stay,
All things should onward tend;
Man should not clog progression's way,
But strive to move and mend.
The waters move in depths of ocean,
The streams along the dales,
And rivulets, with onward motion,
Through sweet and verdant vales,
Move on!

The clouds move gently through the sky,
The earth rolls ever on;
Time swiftly in its course runs by,
And years pass one by one.
Man, too, should strive to follow them,
In this their onward way,
Permitting nought the tide to stem,
But ever, day by day,
Move on!

Men may be wiser, if they strive—
More virtuous, if they will;
And who, within the world, would thrive,
Must aim at higher still.
Let bigots stand by doctrines old,
The wise will pass them by—
Weak minds wallowing with subtle hold,
But strong ones, valiantly
Move on!

Like waters rolling to the ocean,
Down mountains piled on high—
Like clouds forever in commotion,
That move across the sky—
Will we forever onward press,
Thus fearless and free,
And deeming virtue happiness,
Our watchword ever be—
Move on!

YOU ASK ME HOW I LIVE.

Living friendly, feeling friendly,
Acting kindly to all men,
Seeking to do that to others
They may do to me again;
Hating no man, scorning no man,
Wronging none by word or deed,
But forbearing, soothing, serving,
Thus live—and this my creed.

Harsh condemning, fierce condemning,
Is of little Christian use;
One soft word of kindly meaning,
Is worth a torrent of abuse.
Calling things bad, calling men bad,
Add but darkness to their night;
If thou wouldst improve a brother,
Let thy goodness be his light.

I have felt and known how bitter
Human coldness makes the world,
Every bosom round me frozen,
Not an eye with pity peered;
Still my heart with kindness teeming,
Glad when other hearts are glad,
And my eye a tear-drop findeth
At the sight of others sad.

Ab't be kind—life hath no secret
For our happiness like this;
Kindly hearts are seldom sad ones,
Blessing ever bringeth bliss.

Lend a helping hand to others,
Smile, though all the world should frown;
Man is man, we all are brothers,
Black or white, or red or brown.

Man is man through all gradations,
Little rocks it where he stands,
How divided into nations,
Scattered over many lands;
Man is man, by form and feature,
Man by vice and virtue too,
Man in all—one common nature
Speaks and binds us brothers true.

ANECDOTES.

When Philip Henry, the father of the celebrated commentator, sought the hand of the only daughter and heiress of Madeline in marriage, an objection was made by her father, who admitted that he was a gentleman, a scholar, and an excellent preacher, but he was a stranger, and they did not even know where he came from. "True, my daughter," said he, "but I know where he is going, and I should like to go with him;" and they walked life's pilgrimage together.

"Quer philosopher these children."
"Ma, do combs eat?"
"No, child."
"Well, what do they have teeth for?"

An Irishman, who lived in an attic, being asked what part of the house he occupied, answered, "If the houses were turned topsy-turvy, I'd be livin' on the first floor!"

"Pray, Miss," said Jonathan, in a low tone of voice, at the close of a quilting party, "shall I see you home?"

"No!" answered the lady, sharply.

"Perhaps you didn't understand me," said Jonathan aloud.

"I understand, you ask me for my company home."

"Not at all, I asked you—how's your mammy?"

"Hello, Jim, I've got a conundrum for you."

"Well, let's have it: I'm good for it."

"Suppose my wife should fall overboard, what letter in the alphabet would express my wish in regard to her?"

"Why—Letter B, of course."

"I live in Julia's eyes," said an affectionate dame in Colman's hearing.

"I don't wonder at it," replied George, "since I observed she had a sig in them when I saw her last."

"I am confident," said an Irishman, "that the blackbird, as well as myself, sometimes whistles for his dinner." "How do we make that out, me darlin'?" "Because, don't ye see, ye spudgen, that they say when the blackbird whistles he's calling after his mate."

On the next evening, young Loring called in. Kate was longer than usual in making her appearance, and when she came into the parlor, was dressed with more than ordinary care. For the first time I noticed on her wrist a new and beautiful bracelet. She blushed slightly as she met Loring; seemed a little embarrassed; but was soon conversing with him in an animated style.

"Did you see that new bracelet?" asked my wife, when we were next alone.

"I did."

"Where did it come from?"

" Didn't you say in one of the Valentines she received there was something hard, like a piece of jewelry?"

"Yes."

"That bracelet, probably."

"No doubt of it."

"And, moreover," said I, "it is plain that she believes the Valentine came from Loring, for, at her first meeting with him, she wears it for the first time."

"Thus," remarked my wife, notifying him that she receives the token kindly."

"I laughed aloud for I could not help it."

"Why do you laugh?" asked my wife.

"She was going to discard any one who insulted her with a Valentine."

"That was idle talk. I've heard such things said before."

Two or three evenings went by, and Loring came again. Since his former visit the new bracelet had not been seen; now it was worn again. As we knew the young man well, and liked him the better the more intimately we knew him, we saw no impropriety in leaving the young couple alone in the parlor.

From that time there was a marked change in my niece. She was less sprightly and more absent minded than usual. Next, her appetite failed her, and she began to grow thin and lose color—sure signs of a heart-disease. Meanwhile Loring was a constant visitor, and whenever he came, the bracelet was displayed, evidently in token that she knew from whence it came, and wished its full acceptance to be understood. At last I received a formal visit from the young man, and a formal offer for the hand of Kate. Of course I had no objection to urge. That matter was, in my mind, already settled.

After that the bracelet before mentioned was always to be seen on the arm of Kate. One evening, about a month before her wedding day, as I sat talking with Kate, for whom my affection had always been as tender as that of a father for his child. I took her hand, and said as I examined the bracelet—

"That is very beautiful."

"Yes, I have always admired it very much," she replied, the color growing warmer in her cheeks.

"A love token, I presume?"

"And as I said this I looked at her archly. The hue of her cheeks became still deeper."

"A Valentine?" I added.

"The blood mounted to her temples."

"But it was not an ordinary Valentine. It did not come from a trifler, and was not received as an insult. I thought you were not the girl Kate to reject an offer."

"This little love token dear Kate is for thee. Accept it, and keep it and wear it for me."

As I repeated this couplet, the young girl started with surprise, and looked with inquiring earnestness into my face.

"But I'm afraid, Kate," said I with a meaning smile, and a voice half regretful in its tone. "But you wore it less for the real than for an imaginary giver."

She did not reply, but looked at me more earnestly, while a sudden light appeared to break upon her mind.

"Dear uncle," said she at length, bending towards me, "had you seen this bracelet before you saw it on my arm?"

"Yes, love," was my tenderly spoken reply, and I pressed her pure forehead with my lips as I spoke.

"And you sent it?"

She seemed half breathless as she awaited my reply.

"Yes, dear."

She covered her face suddenly with her hands and sat motionless for some moments. In a little while I saw a tear come stealing through her fingers. My feelings were touched, for I feared least I had done violence to her, by this little confession of the truth. But ere I had looked for composure of mind, she withdrew her hands from her face, on which an affectionate smile shone like a rainbow amid the parting drops of a summer shower, and said as she arose—

"I will wear it for the real giver." Bending to kiss me, she left a tear on my cheek, and then glided from the room.

On her wedding night, Kate wore her Valentine bracelet; and I am weak enough to believe—if the sentiment may be called a weakness—that she prized it even more highly than if Loring himself had been the giver.

BEAU CATCHERS. When we see a girl standing one fourth of her time at the glass twisting her hair into ringlets, which they term "beau catchers," we rather guess the beau catchers will find himself caught in an evil net.

MR. MANN'S LETTER.

MR. EDITOR.—Having read the letter of the Hon. Horace Mann to his constituents, I respectfully commend it to the careful perusal of all who have not to procure a copy at the earliest moment, and read, reflect, and preserve it.

It is a production of consummate ability, worthy of our talented representative, from the eighth Congressional District. He speaks of Mr. Webster with boldness, and a force of truth which cannot fail of convincing one that our Massachusetts statesman stands before this portion of the country in no very enviable position, and has made a most servile and ignoble bid in his late speech, for the Presidency of these United States.

Let not an undue estimate of Mr. Webster's talents, blind us to such a degree, that he can do no wrong, or has not shamefully betrayed the cause of humanity and of God, for an occupancy of the White House. What inconsistencies will not a man practise, by word and deed, to pave a way to the goal of his ambition!—he may as well sell his birthright for a mess of pottage as say Amen.

TRUTH.

(For the Quincy Patriot)
THE SINGING SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR.—I was much gratified and pleased to see what order and attention the scholars manifested, as they listened to the instruction of their teacher, Mr. Newall, in the Singing School, on Wednesday evening last, to what had been manifested in every previous School. I think the noise and disturbance which has hitherto prevailed, has been allayed, in a great measure, by the remarks of your correspondents, "Justice," and "Justice & Mercy"—and especially those of the latter, which thinks that the course pursued, both by parents and teachers in regard to the behavior of their children, is wrong, and ought to be remedied or fatal consequences will be the result.

Children have feelings and sympathies as well as men and women,—why not treat them as such. Why not appeal to those feelings, to that inherent sense of honor which exists in their breasts, instead of using threats and false protestations to bring them to a sense of what is due to good order and decorum? It is useless to deny that the scholars have taste for vocal music and instruction—it is the manner of teaching and the usage they receive which enables them to fix their attention upon the subject before them, and to make an indelible impression on their minds.

The remarks made by Mr. Thayer on the occasion, were very appropriate—especially in regard to admitting spectators to the School. Let all those around the doors of the Hall be invited to come in, instead of threatening and driving them away and I will venture to say, that there will be less annoyance and disturbance than has hitherto been.

LECTURE ON GREECE.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me through your columns, to call the attention of the citizens of Quincy to the Lecture which Mr. C. P. Castanis, native Greek, kindly consented to repeat this evening, at the Town Hall, at 8 o'clock P. M., by request of a number of those who attended his first lecture on Thursday evening last—the subject of which was highly instructive and entertaining. This being the last opportunity we shall have to listen to a relation of the struggles of the brave Greeks, to obtain their liberties—from one who was an actor in the drama, I hope that our citizens will be on hand to greet him with a full house—as I am sure they will be highly gratified and instructed by his illustrations and eloquence.

SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1850.

JOHN A. GREEN, Editor.

LECTURE ON GREECE. We hope our friends will attend the Lecture, this evening, at the Town Hall, to be given by Mr. C. P. Castanis, the learned Greek, who lectured at the same place on Thursday evening last—but owing to the inclemency of the weather, had a small but attentive audience to hear his instructive and entertaining remarks upon Greece—the land of his birth—the land of Demosthenes—Socrates and Plato—the land which has been so much oppressed—and of Marco Bozaris, that noble warrior and patriot, who with but a handful of patriots achieved their liberties.

Let all the youth attend, and listen attentively to his eloquent and impressive remarks.

STORE ROBBED. Last Thursday night, the Jewelry store of Mr. E. C. Redfern, in this town, was entered by robbers, and Jewelry to the amount of $80 stolen,—consisting of Watch-Keys, Spectacles, &c.

The robbers ransacked every drawer and box that they could find in the store; but the safe, containing the more valuable articles, such as gold watches, rings, chains, &c., was left untouched. It is supposed that the robbers became alarmed by something, as several valuable articles were left behind in their flight.

LETTER OF HON. HORACE MANN. This gentleman will receive our thanks for a copy of his truly excellent letter to his constituents, which he entitles, "New Dangers to Freedom, and New Duties for its Defenders." Its great length forbids us from publishing it, but we shall next week give a synopsis.

The editor of the Providence Journal, in speaking of this letter, says:—

"It is intended for his immediate constituents, but on such a subject and in such a time, Mr. Mann appeals to a wider constituency than a district—to the great constituency of patriotism, of freedom, of humanity. It is not often that any man, by a single effort, has made the deep impression which this letter is destined to produce upon the public mind."

THE GENERAL COURT. This body closed its rather long session of one hundred and twenty-two days at half past five o'clock on Friday afternoon, of last week, having passed three hundred and twenty acts and one hundred and eleven resolves, being an average of more than three acts and one resolve, for each and every working day of the session, besides transacting other business. CRAPE SHAWLS, MANTILLAS AND VISITES!!! We are requested to invite attention to the superior styles sold by Jewell & Prescott, No. 2 Milk Street, Boston. It is also worthy of remark that purchasers can make selections from this assortment by paying only one small profit, as Messrs. J. & P. import their own goods and sell low at wholesale and retail.

A DASTARDLY ACT. Between the hours of twelve and one o'clock on Monday night last, a shell charged with powder or other explosive matter, was placed in the cellar window in one corner of the residence of Deputy Marshal Frederick Warren, in Worcester, where it exploded with a loud report, and shattering one of the windows. Fortunately no person was injured. Pieces of the shell were scattered in all directions, one of which was thrown with great force across the street, lodging in a fence, and in its passage cutting off a tolerably sized limb of a tree.

OAK HALL. There is probably no establishment in the country, where ready-made clothing can be bought on better terms than at Oak Hall, Boston. It is a very extensive clothing house, and Mr. Simmons delights in giving his customers first-rate bargains. We advise our friends visiting Boston to call.

NOTICES

THE TESTIMONY OF SCIENCE, As to the virtues of Dr. Corbett's Concentrated Syrup of Sarsaparilla.

This sovereign remedy of disease is prepared by Dr. Corbett of the Shaker Society, Canterbury, N. H., who, through a long life, has made Diseases of the Blood, Scrofulous Taint, Consumptive Habit, Cancerous Affections, and all Urinary Troubles, a special study. The results of his researches were at once given to the Medical Faculty of New Hampshire, and other states, and afterwards to the ablest Professors of Medicine, Physicians, Chemists, &c., in the country. The expression of opinion has been uniform, that it is the most efficacious Preparation for the above diseases yet known.

The following is conclusive as to this:

Hanover, N. H., Dec. 23, 1847.

"I first became acquainted with the Compound Concentrated Syrup of Sarsaparilla, prepared by Dr. Corbett, of the Shakers' Society, somewhat more than four years ago, at the time he made his precious discovery publickly, and in the Medical Society of New Hampshire Medical Society. It was once believed that the formula then published by Dr. Corbett could not fail to prove a most valuable remedy in all cases in which the peculiar effects of Sarsaparilla are required. This expectation has, on trial, been fully realized. It has great efficacy in certain diseases of the skin and of the digestive apparatus, and in most cases, slightly laxative also. I recommend it to practitioners of medicine as superior to any Syrup of Sarsaparilla I have yet tried, in cases requiring its administration, of this remedy; none by physicians being, in my opinion, competent to distinguish the precise conditions in which it is really indicated.

MISCELLANY.

MRS. PECK'S PUDDING.

The disappointments will be dreadful,' said Mrs. Peck, speaking to herself, and looking from the dingy floor up to the bare walls and the blank ceiling. 'But how to get one, heaven only knows!'

It was the afternoon of the 21st of December. Christmas day was at hand, and, for the first time in her existence, Mrs. Peck was without a plum pudding. For years past she had been reduced in life; but never so reduced as that! She was in despair.

With Mrs. Peck's plum-pudding on Christmas day was an article of her faith.

Yes—she must have one, though it should prove but a dumpling of larger growth. But how? Buying was out of the question—she had not half a farthing in the house—a widow without a mite!—and stealing was not to be thought of—she must borrow or beg. Once arrived at this conclusion, she acted on it without delay. There were plenty of little emissaries at hand, in the shape of her own children for the necessary errands, namely, Careful Susan, Dirty Polly, Greedy Charley, Whistling Dick, Little Jack, and Ragged Peter, so called from a fragment of linen that usually dangled behind him, like a ship's ensign from its stern.

'Children!' said Mrs. Peck, 'I am going to have a Christmas plum-pudding.'

At such an unexpected announcement, the children shouted, jumped about, and clapped their skinny hands. But their mirth was of brief duration. Second thoughts for once none of the best, soon reminded them that the cupboard was as bare as Mother Hubbard's; while the maternal pocket was equally empty. There was a dead silence, at last broken by Little Jack.

'But mammy you have got no plums.'

'And no flour,' said Careful Susan.

'And no sugar,' said Ragged Peter.

'And no almonds and no orange peel,' said Greedy Charley.

'No eggs,' said Careful Susan.

'And never a saucepan,' said Whistling Dick.

'As to almonds and orange peel, said Mrs. Peck, 'we must do without. Our pudding will be a very plain one—that is to say, if we get it all, for there is not one ingredient in the house. We must borrow and beg; so get ready, all of you, to run on my errands.'

'Let me go for the plums, mother,' said Greedy Charley; but knowing his failing, she assigned him to plead to Mr. Crop, the butcher, for a morsel of suet. Dirty Polly was to extract a few currants and raisins, and some sugar if she could, out of Mr. Perry the grocer; Little Jack was to wheedle a trifle of flour from Mr. Stone, the baker; and Careful Susan was to get three eggs of Mrs. Sankins, who did mending in her parlor, and kept fowls in cellar. Whistling Dick, undertook to borrow a saucepan; and, as Ragged Peter insisted also on commission, he was sent to hunt about the streets, and pick up a little orange peel—certainly interjections of their own.

'Hold me!' cried the widow, 'lay hold of me, or I shall run away. I'm half crazy—take me out of my sight! A pair of old pluses!'

'I thought,' whined Peter, 'they was things from the pantry. But that comes of turning my back to the porter and exposing my rags. I wish, I do that I was all front!'

'There's Dick,' exclaimed Susan; 'I hear his whistle in the distance. I wonder if he has got the saucepan!'

'Oh, of course we shall have that,' said the widow, with great bitterness; repeated disappointments had brought her to the mood for what she called arranging Providence.—'Yes, we shall have the saucepan, no doubt; just because we're nothing to put in it.' She was wrong. In another minute Dick was standing flour a quartet of the best—was measured out but when Mrs. Stone found that no money was forthcoming, she emptied back the flour, and tossed the empty flour-bag into the face of the urchin. Seeing the misery of the child, however, she took him into a back room and thrusting a paper parcel into his hand said—'There, there's spiritual food—go home, and tell your mother to feed you well with it.' Jack ran home, wondering what the gift could be.

Careful Susan could squeeze no eggs from Mrs. Sankins, the egg-merchant, but got from her a receipt for making a pudding—rich, yet home.

Ragged Peter found no orange-peel; but a kindly butler observing a rent in the hinder part of the boy's trowsers, beckoned him to come in, and shortly produced a large bundle, which he presented to Peter, saying—

'There, take that, it's good stuff; tell your mother to do her best with it.'

'We'll have a pudding, any how,' thought Peter, running home, his rags fluttered in the wind.

Whistling Dick's voyage of discovery proved a failure; he only succeeded in getting a teatotum, instead of a saucepan.

We now return to Mrs. Peck, who was waiting anxiously at home for the materials of the Christmas pudding.

The widow Peck has been described as a woman of sanguine disposition. We left her sitting with her elbows on the table, and her chin between her hands, with a dreamy, steamy plumb-pudding in all its glory before her—a vision not at all dispelled by the arrival of Greedy Charley with a real substantial lump of suet. He was closely followed by Dirty Polly, but alas! without those conical paper bags associated with sugar and spice, and all that is nice in grocery.

'What? no raisins—no currants—no sugar in nothing?'

'Yes—that!' said Dirty Polly, throwing her packet on the table; 'and you're to make a good use of it.'

The mother caught up the packet, and impatiently tearing off the envelope, in a faint voice proclaimed the contents.

'A square of yellow soap!'

'A square of yellow soap!' repeated the children.

'I should like to know of Heaven,' said the widow, holding up the article towards the ceiling, 'how I am to use that in a pudding!—But Heaven made no answer.'

'It's for washing my face with!' cried Dirty Polly, very indignantly. 'I saw him stare at me!'

'Well, there can't be a plum-pudding without plums,' said the widow, looking the very picture of despair. But her lamentations were cut short by the entrance of Little Jack; he had brought the flour, of course.

'No, mammy,' said Jack, 'I've got no flour at all; but there's grits.'

'Grits!' exclaimed the widow. 'Who wants grits? But the case, when opened, appeared even worse. 'Grits, indeed! It's a parcel of religious tracts!'

'It ain't my fault,' said little Jack, blubbering, and having recourse to an old night-cap for want of a handkerchief. 'It was Mrs. Stone's. She said it was for spurious food, and I thought she meant grits, with rum in it.'

'Well, well,' said the widow, forgetting mother-like, her own troubles in the grief of her little one. 'Don't cry. We shall, perhaps, have a pudding yet—who knows? Susan may be well, will have better luck.'

As she spoke, Susan stepped into the room, and walking gravely up to the table, began to search under her frock.

'Why, in mercy's name!' exclaimed the alarmed widow, 'what is the girl fumbling at? You surely have not brought the eggs in your pocket?'

'I haven't brought the eggs in anything,' said Susan, still grouping among her petticoats.

'No! Then what have you brought?'

'A receipt for a plum pudding.'

'A receipt! screamed the excited widow, 'a receipt! Why, it's the only thing I don't want—I can write a receipt myself—take a pound of suet, a pound of currants, a pound of plums—but, how am I to take 'em? Where's my materials?'

'Here they are, mother,' shouted the well-known voice of Ragged Peter, as he bounded into the room and threw a good-looking bundle on the table. 'There's the materials!'

'Then we're in luck, after all!' said the widow, nervously tugging at the knots of the old handkerchief, which suddenly gave way, allowed the materials to unfold themselves.

'Olor! O cri! O crimin!' ejaculated Peter and Charley, and Little Jack, the girls using similar interjections of their own.

'Hold me!' cried the widow, 'lay hold of me, or I shall run away. I'm half crazy—take me out of my sight! A pair of old pluses!'

'I thought,' whined Peter, 'they was things from the pantry. But that comes of turning my back to the porter and exposing my rags. I wish, I do that I was all front!'

'There's Dick,' exclaimed Susan; 'I hear his whistle in the distance. I wonder if he has got the saucepan!'

'Oh, of course we shall have that,' said the widow, with great bitterness; repeated disappointments had brought her to the mood for what she called arranging Providence.—'Yes, we shall have the saucepan, no doubt; just because we're nothing to put in it.'

'I wish,' said Peter, 'I had a good use for it.'

QUINCY PATRIOT.

'good pay' are the wheat, and the 'bad pay' the tares of the thorough-bred boarding-house keeper's theology, and she looks upon heaven as a place to which all persons go who pay their board bills, and hell as the receptacle of all, whether dishonest or destitute, who fail in that great moral and religious duty.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1850.

John A. Green, Editor.

HORACE MAN'S LETTER.

We copy from the Boston Transcript the following synopsis of the letter addressed by the worthy Representative in Congress from this District to his constituents. The letter is addressed to James Richardson, 1, Cleveland and Gardner of Dedham, D. A. Simmons, John J. Clark, Francis Hilliard, and Geo. R. Russell, Jr., of Roxbury, and Lysander Richards and others, and is in reply to an invitation from these gentlemen to Mr. Mann to meet and address his constituents of the Eighth Congressional, give them his "views and opinions upon the question of immediate admission of California and other questions now before Congress arising out of acquisition of territory by the treaty with Mexico."

Premising that his relations to political bias, "as the lot of humanity will admit," he says that the reasons why the career of our government as a slavery-extending power should be arrested, seem so strong that they could hardly be made stronger. But the oligarchy who rule the South, seeing that, notwithstanding their rich and almost illimitable domain, they are rapidly falling behind the North in all the distinctive elements of well-being—industry, temperance, education, wealth—not only defend the Upas that blights their soil, as though it were the Tree of Life, but seek to transplant it to other lands. With but about three slaves to a square mile,—three millions of slaves to nearly a million of square miles,—they say they are too crowded, that they feel a sense of suffocation, and must have more room, when all their weakness and pain proceed, not from the limited quantity, but from the bad quality of the atmosphere they breathe. Hence the war with Mexico—hence, also, the determination of the Southern members of Congress, to stop the whole machinery of government, to sacrifice all the great interests of the country, and assail even the Union itself, unless slavery shall be permitted to cross the Rio Grande, and enter the vast regions of the West, as it heretofore crossed the Mississippi and the Sabine.

After a rapid review of the efforts at the close of the last Congress to provide a government for the territories, with no prohibition of slavery, and the attempt of the Senate to incorporate into the appropriation bill the provision which led to the protracted session on the night of the 3d of March, 1843, Mr. Mann says: "Through that memorable night, the friends of freedom wrestled, like Jacob with the angel of God, and through the session did not close until the sun of a sabbath morning shone full into the windows of the Capitol, yet a holier work never was done on that holy day."

The thirty-first Congress opened with some similar events. The choice of a pro-slavery Speaker was followed by the appointment of ultra pro-slavery committees. Mr. Root's resolution, instructing the Committee on Territories to report territorial bills prohibiting slavery was laid upon the table as ill-timed; and the abolitionists have spent enough, the last twenty years, to send all the slaves of Maryland to Liberia. Mr. Mann says the costs would be twenty-five millions of dollars.

Mr. Mann is of opinion, that Mr. Webster's speech, in connection with his two votes in favor of Foote's compromise committee, has done more to jeopardize the cause of freedom in the territories than any other event of this disastrous session.

There is no pecuniary sacrifice, within the limits of the Constitution, which Mr. Mann would not submit to, for the reconciliation of the North and South, and the relief of the country from the calamity and wrong of slavery.

He would appropriate public revenues, and submit to private taxation. Pecuniary measures he would gladly make for the sake of peace, but not for peace itself would he surrender liberty.

In conclusion, he says: "My words have been cool as the telegraphic wires, while my feelings have been like the lightning that runs through them. The idea that Massachusetts should contribute, or consent to the extension of Human slavery!—is it not enough not merely to arouse the living from their torpor, but the dead from their graves?"

FIRE. On Monday afternoon last, the residence of Lemuel Humphrey, Esq., a short distance from the North Church in Weymouth, was entirely consumed. Most of the furniture was saved. The cause of the fire is supposed to have been from a defect in the chimney.

POPULATION OF QUINCY. By the returns of the Selectmen, it appears that the population of this town, on the first of May current, was 4958. By the School Districts it stands as follows—in the Centre 4888—South, 1264—West, 1126—Quincy Point, 676—North, 397—East, 107.

CONGRESS. Thus far little business has been transacted in the "councils of the nation." Every thing is centered in the admission of California as a State of the Union. The slave interest, from present appearances, stand the best chance of success. Under Providence it must fail—it is wrong in every sense of the terms.

COURT AT DEADHAM. The term of the Common Pleas Court has adjourned a session of nineteen days.

The Town of Dorchester against the Town of Quincy on a pauper case we believe, resulted in verdict for the plaintiffs for $59.84.

A large amount of business has been done at this session, and much credit is due to Judge Hoar who has labored to clear the docket.

The annual production of the manufactures of coarse shoes known as brogans, in Massachusetts, is stated to be in value twenty millions of dollars, or more, than four years ago, at the time it was made. The composition public to the members of the New Hampshire Medical Society. It was at once believed that the formula then published by Dr. Corbett, of the Shakers' Society, somewhat more than four years ago, at the time it was made, was the best. The expression of opinion has been uniform, that it is the most efficacious Preparation for the above disease, yet known.

The following is conclusive as to this:—

Hanover, N. H., Dec. 23, 1847.

"I first became acquainted with the Compound Concentrated Syrup of Sarsaparilla, prepared by Dr. Corbett, of the Shakers' Society, somewhat more than four years ago, at the time it was made. The composition public to the members of the New Hampshire Medical Society. It was at once believed that the formula then published by Dr. Corbett could not fail to prove a most valuable remedy in all cases in which the peculiar effects of Sarsaparilla are required. This expectation has, on trial, been fully realized. It has peculiar efficacy in certain diseases of the skin and of the digestive apparatus, and in scrophularian conditions generally. The ingredients are the Sarsaparilla itself, of which it contains more than the other preparations I have used, increase its alternative effects, and render it diuretic, and, in most cases, slightly laxative also. I recommend it to practitioners of medicine as superior to any Syrup of Sarsaparilla I have yet tried, in cases requiring the administration, of this remedy; none but physicians being, in my opinion, competent to distinguish the precise conditions in which it is really indicated.

MEDICINAL USES OF THE WILD CHER-

RY.

Ever since the settlement of America, Wild Cherry has been known to possess very important medicinal virtues. Every body knew this fact, but nobody knew how to extract the essential properties. Every mother gives Wild Cherry tea to her children for worms, for colds, and for most every disease; and adults throughout our country are in the habit of making a compound of Syrup of Wild Cherry bark and other ingredients, to be used in spring as an antidote to complaints incident to that changeable season. It is found by experiment that the wild cherry possesses even far more important qualities than was ascribed to it. For the first stage of Consumption, Asthma, no matter how long standing. Coughs, Liner Complaints, etc., it is proved to be the best medicine known to man. Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry is a chemical extract, combined with a similar extract from Tar, which enhances its value. Its success in curing pulmonary diseases, in almost every stage, after our best physicians could do no more, has astonished the faculty, and led them to confess that Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry possesses a principle heretofore unknown among medical men.

None is genuine, unless signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

POETRY.

YOU ASK ME HOW I LIVE.
Living friendly, feeling friendly,
Acting fairly to all men,
Seeking to do that to others
They may do to me again;
Hating no man, scorning no man,
Wronging none by word or deed,
But forbearing, smiting, serving,
Thus I live—and this my creed.

Harsh condemning, fierce contemning,
Is of little Christian use;
One soft word of kindly meaning,
Is worth a torrent of abuse.
Calling things bad, calling men bad,
Add's but darkness to their night;
If thou wouldst improve a brother,
Let thy goodness be his light.

I have felt and known how bitter
Human coldness makes the world,
Every bosom round me frozen,
Not an eye with pity peered;
Still my heart with kindness teeming,
Glad when other hearts are glad,
And my eye a tear drop findeth
At the sight of others sad.

Ah! be kind—life hath no secret
For our happiness like this;
Kindly hearts are seldom sad ones,
Blessing ever bringeth bliss.
Lend a helping hand to others,
Smile though all the world should frown;
Man is man, we all are brothers,
Black or white, or red or brown.

Man is man through all gradations,
Little reck it where he stands,
How divided into nations,
Scattered over many lands;
Man is man, we all are brothers,
Man by virtue and virtue too,
Man in all—one common nature
Speaks and binds us brothers true.

SOMETHING GOOD IN EVERY HEART.
Wouldst win the crime stained wanderer back,
From Vice's dark and hideous track—
Let not a frown thy brow deform,
'Twill add but fierceness to the storm;
Deal kindly—in that bosom dark

Still shines Virtue's glimmering spark;
Plead with him—'tis the nobler part—
There's something good in every heart!
Bring the mind the early time,
T'ers sin had stained his soul with crime;
When fond affection blessed his hours—
And strewed his joyous path with flowers;
When sportive jest, and harmless glee
Bespeak a spirit pure and free;
Plead with him—'tis the nobler part—
There's something good in every heart!

There was a time that head did rest,
Close to a mother's yearning breast—
A time his ear the precepts caught,
A kind and virtuous father taught;
It matters not what treacherous ray
First lured his steps from Virtue's way—
Enough to know thou yet may'st save
That soul from sin's engulfing wave;
Plead with him—act the nobler part—
There's something good in every heart!

THE LOVE OF PRAISE.

The love of praise, how'er concealed by art,
Glowes more or less, and reigns in every heart;
The proud to gain it, toil and toil endure;
The modest shun it, but to make it sure,
It aids the dancer's skill, the writer's head—
And helps the plain with mountains of the dead.
Nor ends it here; it neds with sable plume—
Shines on our hearts, and glitters on our tomb.

ANECDOTES.

A jurymen in court, on the oath being administered, asked the clerk to speak up. "I cannot hear what you say."

Judge—"Are you deaf?"

Jury—"Yes, of one ear."

Judge—"Then you had better leave that box, for it is necessary the jurymen should hear both sides."

The box not created a good deal of laughter.

"Children and fools," says the old adage, "always tell the truth." "Mother sent me," said a little girl to a neighbor, "to ask you to come and take tea with her this evening." "Did she say at what time, my dear?" "No me'm; she only said she would ask you, and then the thing would be off her mind; that was all she said!"

A lady who had refused to give, after hearing a charity sermon, had her pocket picked as she left the church. On making the discovery, she said, "If God could not find the way into my pocket, the devil could."

"You're a pretty fellow," said the owner of a wood pile to a thief, "to come here and steal my wood while I sleep."

"Yes," replied the thief, "and I suppose you would stay up there and see me break my back with lifting, before you would offer to come down and help me."

An infidel remarked, within the hearing of a little girl of thirteen, that all things came by chance, and that the world like a mushroom sprang up in the night.

"I should like to know, sir," she asked, "where the seed came from."

Dr. R. endeavoring to kill a turkey by an electric shock, received the whole battery himself; when he good naturally observed, that instead of killing a turkey, he had nearly put an end to the existence of a goose.

A man very much intoxicated was sent to prison.

"Why didn't you bail him out?" inquired a bystander.

"Bell him out?" exclaimed the other—"you couldn't pump him out."

MISCELLANY.

A RACE ON THE RACE COURSE.

Once on a time a queer old fellow named Smith started from Southern city upon a pedestrian excursion of about one hundred miles.

He was not such a very old fellow, either; he was about forty years older than when he was born. This Mr. Smith (he was not connected with the John Smith family in the most remote degree) was a man of many peculiarities. If absolute stupidity did not form a prominent trait in his character, it was a quality which very much resembled stupidity, and might easily be mistaken for it, by at least one half the world. He had manifested a singular abstraction, generally described as absence of mind, and would frequently roam about the streets an entire day without recognizing one of his numerous friends—apparently without being aware of the nature of his movements.
This was Mr. Smith.

We were saying that Mr. Smith started upon a journey on the 'ten toed machine' spoken of in John Bull. After travelling a few miles our pedestrian felt somewhat thirsty, and called at a small establishment, which looked as though it was about half a tavern for a drink.
A good natured young fellow waited upon him, brought him brandy and water, and in addition furnished him with a bit of bread and cheese.
All this was decidedly welcome and refreshing.
When Mr. Smith had quenched his thirst and satisfied the slight craving of appetite, he recommended his travels, and, as he left the city garden, pass by me with a smile and nod; he would stop, put his book in his pocket, and though his talk was often above my comprehension, still, somehow, I felt happier and better, and less of an infant, when I thought over it, and tried to puzzle out the meaning; for he had a way of suggesting; not touching, putting things into my head, and then leaving them to work out their own problems. Not long after this, Mr. Squills made a present far exceeding in value those usually bestowed on children; it was a beautiful large domino-box in cut ivory painted and gilt. This dominobox was my delight. I was never weary of playing at dominoes with Mr. Prinmous, and I slept with the box under my pillow. 'Ah,' said my father, one day, when he found me ranging the ivory parallelograms in the parlor—'ah, you like that better than your play-things, eh?' 'Oh, yes, papa.' You would be very sorry if your mama was to throw that box out of the window and break it, for sure? I looked beseekingly at my father and made no answer.

'But, perhaps you would be very glad,' he resumed, 'if suddenly one of those good fairies you read of could change the domino box into a beautiful geranium, in a beautiful blue and white flower-pot, and that you could have all the pleasure of putting it on your mamma's window sill?' 'Indeed I would?' said I, half-crying. 'My dear boy, I believe you;
but good wishes don't mend bad actions.' So saying, he shut the door and went out. I cannot tell you how puzzled I was to make out what my father meant by his aphorism. But I then pushed ahead; but as the sun crept down towards the horizon, Mr. Smith began to feel some degree of weariness stealing over him,
still he persevered until it was quite dark.
Finding himself opposite a small house by the road side, he inquired of a youth seated upon
the threshold—

'Who lives here, my son?'
'Mr. Sampson, sir.'

'Do you keep a tavern?'
'Why, sorter and sorter not; we accommodate people sometimes.'

'Can I get dinner here?'
'Yes, sir—walk in.'

Our traveller walked in, and in the course of half an hour a nice comfortable dinner, smoking hot, was set before him. He ate, drank, paid his moderate bill, put on his hat, took his walking stick and proceeded upon his journey. Before he renewed his labors, however, he took the precaution to fill his pipe carefully and light it. Fresh and vigorous as ever, he then pushed ahead; but as the sun crept down towards the horizon, Mr. Smith began to feel
some degree of weariness stealing over him,
still he persevered until it was quite dark.
Finding himself opposite a small house by the road side, he inquired of a youth seated upon
the threshold—

'Who lives here, my son?'
'Mr. Sampson, sir.'

'Can I get supper and lodging here to-night, by paying for it?'
'Certainly, sir—walk in.'

Mr. Smith crossed the threshold, laid aside his hat and cane, drank a cup of tea and ate two or three slices of toast—read four chapters in Fox's Book of Martyrs, which he found upon the mantelpiece, and went to bed. When he awoke in the morning, the sun was just showing its broad red disc above the tree tops.
He found the breakfast upon the table, waiting for him. He finished the morning meal, settled accounts and commenced his travels the second day. One thing, simply, attracted his observation—the road was exceedingly uniform—but the fact excited no surprise. At noon he called at a snug little house, and asked a lad who was gazing out of a window—

'Who lives here, my son?'
'Mr. Sampson, sir.'

Our traveller paused a moment, reflected, and seemed to be conning over some name or circumstance in his mind—at last he said—

'Are there many of the name of Sampson on this road, my son?'
'A good many,' said the boy.
I thought so. Can you give me dinner here?'
'Certainly, sir—walk in.'

Mr. Smith stepped in, swallowed his dinner, and once more took the road. When night came on he of course stopped at the first house in his way. A youth sat upon a wheelbarrow at the door, whistling.

'Who lives here, my son?'
'Mr. Sampson, sir.'

'Mr. Sampson! by Jupiter! I should think they were all Sampsons on this road. I got dinner at Mr. Sampson's yesterday, slept at another Mr. Sampson's last night, and here I am at Mr. Sampson's to-night. Besides, the houses I have seen upon the road all look alike.'

'Very queer,' replied the boy, with a leer, which seemed to say, 'you can't fool me, old fellow.'

'Can you give me supper and lodging?' said
the traveller.

'Certainly—walk in.'

'I'm dairn if this isn't a queer country,' said the old man as he went to bed; 'this looks exactly like the room I slept in last night—but I suppose it is all right.'

It was full two o'clock the next day, when after travelling briskly at least six hours, Mr.
Smith stopped at a comfortable small dwelling with the intention of securing his dinner. A boy stood in the door.

'How d'ye do?' said the boy.

'Nicely, my son. Who lives here?'
Mr. Sampson. I've told you that half a dozen times already.'

'The d—l you have. I haven't been here before, have I?'
'I reckon you have—but aint you travelling on a bet?'
'Travelling on a bet!—no—what put that in your head?'
'Why you've been walking round the race course here for two days and a half, and I don't suppose you was doing it in fun.'—N. O.
Picayune.

THE BROKEN FLOWER-POT.

Pisistratos, the young hero, pushed his mother's favorite flower-pot out of the window in mischief, and told the truth about it. From that time I first date the hour when I felt that I loved my father, and knew that he loved me; from that time, too, he began to converse with me. He would no longer, if he met me in the garden, pass by me with a smile and nod; he would stop, put his book in his pocket, and though his talk was often above my comprehension, still, somehow, I felt happier and better, and less of an infant, when I thought over it, and tried to puzzle out the meaning; for he had a way of suggesting; not touching, putting things into my head, and then leaving them to work out their own problems. 'But, perhaps you would be very glad,' he resumed, 'if suddenly one of those good fairies you read of could change the domino box into a beautiful geranium, in a beautiful blue and white flower-pot?' 'My dear,' said my father, leaning his hand on my shoulder, 'every body who is in earnest to be good, carries two fairies about with him; one here, and one there.' 'What then, my child?' 'Why, how then can my domino-pot be changed into a geranium and

POETRY.

AMERICAN SLAVERY.
Tell me if this be freedom's home!
Is this the land I've loved so well?
Or do I in some region roam
Where men drink not at Truth's pure well?

Is this the land where patriots bled?

Freedom's fair mansion to prepare?

Now by the memories of the dead,

Is this the fruit their labors bear?

For this did fearless Warren die?

A Washington unsheathed the sword?

And has the truth become a lie?

All vain the sage and patriot's word?

Oh, tell me where, beneath the sun,

Amidst the gloom of pagan night,

Such God-defying deeds are done,

Such trampling upon human right!

Alas, my country! thou dost boast

Of Freedom, and a holy God,

Yet slave-ships line thy length'ning coast,

Beneath thy feet are bondmen trod;

Is this the work of Freemen? This

The mission of our "glorious land?"

No! Judas-like, with mocking kiss,

Is freedom slain right where we stand!

How dare ye take the holy name

Of Freedom on your lying lip,

Tyrants who put the Czar to shame

With branding iron, hound and whip!

How dare ye talk of human rights,

Of God the Father, man the child,

While before heaven are spread such sights

Of wrong so deep and grief so wild!

A land of slaves! Oh, humbling tho'!

My native land of chains!

Where human beings, sold and bought,

Increase by blood a "Christian's" gains.

A land of slaves! Ay hear it ye!

Who boast your country and your sires?

Now, outraged Freedom, this shall be

The touch-wood of thine altar fires!

By all our damning guilt and shame!

By all our memories of the pure,

Whose deeds we honor but in name,

Shall justice make her judgments sure?

Shall freedom triumph, slavery fall,

Our country stand erect and free!

Her fettered millions disentangled,

And lead them forth to liberty!

OLD TIMES.

Old times are coming back to me,

Like music o'er the sounding sea.

Old times!

The merry times when I was young—

When all the lads and maidens young

Went out to have a day of fun

Down by the sounding sea.

Old times, when we were free from care,

And joys were scattered everywhere—

Old times!

We danced away the live-long day,

With now and then some childish play,

For 'twas the sunny month of May,

Down by the sounding sea.

Old times, when lads could take a swing

With maidens in the pleasant spring—

Old times!

When careful mothers were not by

To watch with a religious eye

The "vanities beneath the sky,"

Down by the sounding sea.

A NECDOTES.

A fellow from Kentucky went into a store of a fashionable milliner.

"Have you got any skirts?" asked he.

"Plenty of all kinds."

"What do you ask a cord?" said the chap.

"A cord?" replied the woman.

"Yes, I want about a cord. Up in our digging, the petticoats hang out. I see you advertise 'corded skirts,' and I thought while my hand was in, I'd take what you had corded up."

The milliner fainted.

A pair of Irishmen, travelling recently, came upon a mile board, standing by the way side, with this inscription upon it—forty-three miles from Newburg. Supposing it to be a tomb stone, one of them gently tapped the other on the shoulder, and in a low sepulchral tone, said—Tread lightly, Jammy—here lies the dead; forty-three years old, and his name is Miles from Newburg.

A very tall man appeared in the streets, and an old lady, who admired his gigantic stature addressed him—Mister were you large when you were small?

"Yes marm; I was considered big when I was little."

"You look like death on a pale horse," said Jim to a toper, who was growing pale and emaciated.

"I don't know anything about that," said the toper, "but I'm death on pale brandy."

"Waiter!"

"What, sir?"

"A half dozen pigs feet in the shell."

"In a moment, sir, as soon as I mix an Indian meal ging for a Grahamite. Anything else, sir?"

"Yes, a knot-hole fried."

Waiter disappears beneath a standing collar.

"Dad, who is this Sam Francisco that's getting all the gold out there in California? he must be the richest fellow in all them diggings."

"Why, Johnny, I rather think he's some related to the Sam Jacinto who was killed in the Texan war by Gen. Sam Houston."

A leaf from the 'book of nature,' and a leaf from the 'eye of the wind,' are considered curiosities.

TOWN EXPENSES.

Whole amount of money raised for the current expenses of the town for the ensuing year, seven thousand dollars. Last year, the amount was ten thousand dollars, consequently the taxes will be about one-third less this year than last.

We learn that the Milton Academy is in a flourishing condition, and the Superintendent and the teachers give entire satisfaction.

The Town Schools are also well taught, and the School Houses in good order.

We perceive that Milton stands one of the highest in the State Report of the Board of Education.

We are also happy to see by the late State Census that "ours" has made so handsome increase during the past ten years in its population. Indeed, a town, containing so many beautiful sites for "suburban" residences, cannot long be neglected.

We believe Milton and Quincy, in some respects, have advantages over most of the town in the vicinity of Boston.

Land is also cheaper than in many of the towns within the like distance from the city.

We are prepared to see a good deal of building going on during the next ten years in both towns.

HARMONEONS AGAIN! These unrivaled singers, give another concert here on Tuesday evening, at the Town Hall, and present a rare bill for the entertainment. They have added three more members to their company, which, with the others, form a band not unsurpassed in the Union. All lovers of good singing should be there.

THE CIRCUS. Spaulding & Rogers' new Circus makes its appearance here on the 14th of this month. For particulars, see advertisement.

THE CUBA EXPEDITION. It will be seen from the following particulars in regard to the Expedition for the invasion of Cuba, which sailed from different ports of the United States some few weeks since, under command of General Lopez, an exiled Cuban, after having effected a landing at Cardenas, captured the town, and taken the Governor and his aid prisoners, that it has failed:—

It is reported that despatches have been received at Washington, that 500 additional prisoners had been taken on the southern coast of Cuba, in two large vessels. The greater part of them were Americans, and were discharged and permitted to return to the United States, while those of other nations had been summarily tried by court martial. It is also reported that it has been determined in Cabinet council to hold the Cuban authorities in rigid accountability for the treatment of Americans, and that a special agent is to be dispatched forthwith by the State department to attend to the business.

It is said that a vessel is now fitting out at Boston, supposed for the purpose of joining a second expedition to Cuba. It is probable, however, that the vessel alluded to is intended for the Haytian Dominions.

UNITED STATES MONTHLY LAW MAGAZINE.

We have received the May Number of this valuable work. On glancing over its pages, we find it filled with interesting information, pertaining to the law, the earliest information of important decisions and copious abstracts from the most recent reports. It is evidently conducted with ability and judgment, and cannot fail to acquire a large circulation, and attain a high and preeminent position in American periodical literature.

SILK FACTORY IN MASSACHUSETTS. M. Vogel, a Swiss gentleman and the inventor of the heddle machine, is about to start a silk factory near Chelmsford, Mass., to make ribbons, vestings and all kinds of figured silk work.

UNITED STATES LAWYER'S DIRECTORY. We have received a valuable work with the above title, from the publisher, giving a list of all the Lawyers, Commissioners of Deeds, and members of the legal Association in the different States of the Union. To those of the legal profession it is a highly valuable Book.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT. A Mr. Eaton, Conductor of the Freight Train on the Old Colony Railroad, came to his death on Thursday, afternoon, last, by being thrown from the train among the wheels, and mangled in a shocking manner. The accident happened about a mile from the depot in this town.

PAYING DEBTS. One of our exchanges has the following strong remarks on this subject; they drive the nail into the head and clinch it;

Men may sophisticate as they please, they can never make it right and all the bankrupt acts in the universe cannot make it right for them not to pay their debts. There is a sin in this neglect, as clear and as deserving of church discipline as in stealing or false swearing. He who violates his promise to pay, or withholds the payment of a debt, when it is in his power to meet his engagements, ought to be made to feel that, in the sight of all honest men, he is a swindler.

FOUR CADETS, for West Point, have been appointed from Massachusetts, viz; Henry L. Abbott of the 1st district; Henry M. Lazell, 5th district; Charles G. Higinbotham, 7th district; and Allen A. Bursley, 10th district;

Capt. Martin has been acquitted on the charge of having purposely cast away the schooner Abby Hammond.

The Cuban expedition has proved very expeditious—Cuba conquered and the expeditors returned from conquest where they will be safe.

There was no choice of representative to Congress in the Fourth District on Monday—Mr. Palmer requiring about 200 votes to be elected.

"A bottle of wine four hundred years old was drunk one day at President Tyler's table, and a calculation was made of its cost, on the supposition that the price was half a dollar at the first, and that the interest on that half dollar had been collected once every three months, and also laid out on interest during the four hundred years, by which mode the principal would be doubled every eleven years. The result was that four hundred years compound interest on fifty cents amounted to some $49,000.00."

It is astonishing how much wisdom can be compressed into three lines; for example, "The most useful sign-painters in the world are publishers of newspapers—advertise your business in the papers, if you would draw custom."

It is estimated that there is sixteen hundred millions of slave property in the fifteen slave States of this country.

The first newspaper printed in North America, was issued at Boston in April, 1704. It was a government journal solely and published by the Postmaster. Philadelphia claims the next highest honor in 1719. In New York no newspaper was published until 1725.

Fifty six vessels have sailed for California since the fifth of April, six of which were steamers. The steamers now take the principal part of the passengers. The number of vessels which have sailed for California from the Atlantic coast since the excitement first began, has been about 1130.

SIMMONS' OAK HALL, BOSTON. This establishment, so long the centre of attraction to the lovers of fashionable garments, continue to improve by age and rise higher in the scales of excellence. Mr. Simmons is continually on the alert, seeking to make improvements and adding to the attractions of this famous clothing house. A good selection of fashionable goods of the best quality is furnished there at very low prices. Gentlemen would find it for their interest to call and examine.

NOTICES.
The Fair.

The Ladies of the First Congregational Society in this town, propose holding a Fair, for the purpose of raising funds to purchase an organ for their Church. A variety of useful and fancy articles will be offered for sale.

Refreshments, consisting of cake, ice cream, and confectionery of all kinds will be ready for all who wish to purchase.

The Table will be devoted to flowers, of which it is hoped that there will be a rich display.

A Post Office and Chinese Box will be in readiness for the amusement of those who will patronize them. The Fair will be held in the Town Hall, on the evening of Wednesday, June 12, commencing at 7 1/2 o'clock, and will continue through the next day and evening.

Admittance for the first evening, while the tables are bountifully spread, and offer a brilliant display, 25 cents;—through the remainder of the time 12 1/2 cents.

The members of the First Parish, are expected to furnish such articles for the refreshment-table and for the flower tables, as they may feel disposed to contribute, and to lend them aid to insure the greatest success to this great fair.

The public, universally, are invited to attend, as every exertion has been made to render the occasion pleasant and successful.

Engine Meeting.
The regular monthly meeting of the Niagara Engine Company No. 1, will be held at the Engine house on MONDAY EVENING next at sunset.

JOHN F. PIERCE, Clerk.

Temperance Meeting.
Daniel Allen of Walpole, the Norfolk Farmer, will address the citizens of Quincy, at the Town Hall, on SUNDAY EVENING next, to commence at 7 o'clock.

Norfolk County Teachers Association.
The Annual Meeting of this Association will be held in Cohasset, at Rev. Mr. Osgood's Church, on Monday and Tuesday, 3d and 4th of June next.

The Association will hold its first session on Monday, P. M., at 2 o'clock, when a Lecture will be delivered by Prof. E. B. Biggs, of Boston, after which, there will be a discussion on the subject of Moral Discipline in Schools. In the evening, Rev. Barnes Sears, D. D., will be present, and will address the friends of Education.

On Tuesday, A. M., the Association will meet for discussion, and for the choice of Officers for the ensuing year. In the afternoon, a Lecture will be delivered by Christopher A. Greene, Esq., of Milton.—Subject—Orthography."

Discussions will be held upon the proper methods of instructing in the Branches of study pursued in our Common Schools, namely, Reading and Spelling, Geography, Arithmetic, &c. The object of the Association is mutual improvement in whatever will have a tendency to elevate the profession of Teaching, and increase and extend its legitimate influence. A full attendance of the members, of the Association, and of the friends of Education in general, is therefore solicited.

SHAKER FLUID EXTRACT OF VALERIAN.
This Preparation is no Compound! It is a mere extract of the most active properties of the Valerian Root, by a process known only to the Shakers of E. F. D., N. H., and recognized by Professor Augustus A. Hays, State Assayer of Massachusetts.

ROXBURY, JUN. 2, 1849.

Messrs. Edward Brinley & Co.:—

Kind Friends:—My age will be an apology, I hope, for troubling you with a statement of the benefits I have derived from the Fluid Valerian so kindly sent to you by.—For a long time, through increasing age, my health has failed me, and a drooping affection seemed to settle on my Lungs, depriving me at night of my proper rest. Obtaining no relief I tried the Valerian you sent me, although I had used Smith & Perry's with hardly any benefit. To my great comfort I soon found that what you sent me produced the most quiet and tranquil sleep, sparing me from all distress, and making my wakening clear and refreshing.

I therefore feel that this medicine will be the great comfort of my declining years; and I trust all persons who by age are deprived of natural rest, or are suffering under nervous affections will try the medicine, and I am satisfied they will find it such a blessing as never to be without it by their bedside, or in their sick chamber, or recommending it to their friends, who may suffer by sleeplessness and waking nights.

WISTAR'S BALSAM AT THE SOUTH.

One of our agents at Athens, Georgia, has sent us the following letter, with permission to publish the same:—

TRUTH IS MIGHTY AND WILL PREVAIL

ATHENS, AUGUST 24, 1846.

Dear Sir—Having been afflicted for more than ten months with chronic Inflammation of the Lungs, at times very severely, and having adopted many medicines without any but temporary relief,—I purchased about three bottles of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, from the effects of which I obtained more relief than from all the medicines I had ever taken for this distressing disorder. I have by the repeated use of this valuable Balsam, been relieved from pressure for breath and oppression on the lungs than I had anticipated—and, indeed, conceive that I will be cured by continuing its use, of this most distressing malady. I do most cheerfully tender you this acknowledgement, which you will use as your judgment dictates.

POETRY.

SWEET VISITORS.

My mother's voice, how often creeps
Its cadence on my lonely hours!
Like healing on the wings of sleep,
Or dew on the unconscious flowers.
I might forget her melting prayer,
While pleasure's pulses madly fly;
But in the still, unbroken air,
Her gentle tones come stealing by;
And years of sin and manhood flee,
And leave me at my mother's knee.

The book of Nature, and its print
Of beauty on the whispering sea,
Gives still to me some lineament
Of what I have been taught to be.
My heart is harder, and perhaps
My manliness has drunk up tears,
And there's a mildew in the lapis
Of a few miserable years;
But Nature's book is even yet
With all my mother's lessons writ.

I have been out at eventide,
Beneath a moonlight sky of spring,
When earth was garnished like a bride,
And night had on her silver wing;
When bursting buds and growing grass,
And waters leaping to the light,
And all that makes the pulses pass
With wildest fleetness, thronged the night,
When all was beauty; then have I,
With friends on whom my love is flung,
Like myrrh on wings of Araby,
Gazed upward where night's lamp is hung.

And when the beauteous spirit there
Flung over all its golden chain,
My mother's voice came on the air,
Like the night dropping of the rain—
And, resting on some silver star
The spirit of a bending knee,
I've poured a deep and fervent prayer,
That our eternity might be—
To rise in heaven like stars at night,
And tread a living path of light.

THE LONGING.
From out this dim and gloomy hollow,
Where hang the cold clouds heavily,
Could I but gain the clew to follow,
How blessed would the journey be!
Aloft I see a fair dominion,
Through time and change all vernal still;
But where the power, and what the pinion,
To gain the ever-blooming hill?

Again I hear the music ringing—
The lulling sounds of heaven's repose,
And the light gales are downward bringing
The sweets of flowers the mountain knows.
I see the fruits, all golden glowing,
Beckon the glossy leaves between,
And o'er the blooms that there are blowing,
Nor blight nor winter's wrath hath been

To suns that shine forever yonder,
O'er fields that fade not, sweet to see;
The very winds that there may wander,
How healing must their breathing be!
But lo! between us rolls a river,
O'er which the wrathful tempest raves;
I feel the soul within me shiver
To gaze upon the gloomy waves.

A rocking boat mine eyes discover,
But, wo is me, the pilot fails!
In, boldly in—undaunted over!
And trust the life that swells the sails!
Thou must believe, and thou must venture,
In fearless faith thy safety dwells;
By miracles alone men enter
The glorious land of miracles!

A NECDOTES.

An Irishman slipped on the ice and came down "a broadside" upon his back, which stilled his breathing a minute or two, besides bruising his head considerably. Recovering, he jumped up, threw himself into a fighting attitude, shook his fist at the ice as if he was about to take summary vengeance upon the slippery substance, and then, with violent gestures and threatening voice, exclaimed: "Faith, and ye'll take a sweat for this before June sure!"

A Jurymen in Court, on the oath being administered, asked the clerk to speak up. "I cannot hear what you say."

The Judge said—"Stop are you deaf?"

The learned judge—"Then you had better leave that box, for it is necessary the jurymen should hear both sides."

The box not created a good deal of laughter.

A formal, fashionable visiter thus addressed a little girl: "How are you, my dear?"

"Very well, I thank you," she replied.

The visiter then added: "Now, my dear, you should ask me how I am."

The child simply and honestly replied, "I don't want to know."

"I say, John, why is that umbrella of yours," pointing to one full of holes, "like the one I lost the other day?"

"I don't know, Sam. Why is it?"

"Because it ought to be re-covered."

"Whose pigs are those my lad?"

"Why they belong to that there big sow."

"No?" I mean who is the master?"

"Whoy?" again answered the lad, "that little 'un there; he's a ran' to fight."

"Jo, said a Joppa dame to her hopeful son, who followed the piscatory profession, "do dear, fix up a little, you look very slovenly. O, what an awful thing it would be, if you should get drowned looking so!"

Snooks was advised to get his life insured. "Won't do it, said he—it would be just my luck to live forever if I should."

Snooks very meekly said—"Well, I wouldn't my dear."

P. LOW'S UNION HOT AIR

Cooking Stove and Fuel Saver.

AS A COAL COOKING STOVE,

it is just suited for the use of families in cities and villages, and will perform the cooking of a family of from 2 to 8, 10 or 20 persons with certainty and despatch. The fire-chamber is constructed of a size, form and depth, to burn coal with the greatest freedom and economy. WOOD may be used with equal advantage by simply dispensing with the brick lining of the fire-chamber.

A SUMMER APPARATUS

is attached to the front, affording, of itself, ample convenience for light summer work, without the unpleasant effects and expense of heating up the main body of the stove; it may also be used at the same time that the rest of the stove is occupied, greatly adding to its value, and rendering it altogether the most efficient Cooking Stove for the class of families for whom it is expressly designed, ever yet invented.

Any person who will give this stove a fair trial will be convinced of its superiority for ECONOMY, CONVENIENCE and DURABILITY, over any other Air-Tight Cooking Stove.

If its price brings it within the means of all families who want a good stove.

A pamphlet containing a description and directions for fitting up and using this Stove is furnished, gratis, to every purchaser.

These Stoves of the different sizes may be examined at the

Tin and Sheet Iron Manufactory

of the Agent in this town.

E. S. FELLOWS, Agent for the above Store, has also for sale at his Store, the REGULATOR, ECONOMIST'S, and various other patterns of Cook Stove, as well as PARLOR, OFFICE, and CYLINDER.

Removal.

THE subscriber takes this method to inform his customers and the public, that he has moved to the new building lately erected by Mr. Samuel Copland, it being more commodious and better adapted to his business; and also, would tender his sincere thanks for the liberal share of trade which he has received during the past year. Former customers and the public generally are invited to call, where will be found a variety of Stoves, which is the odding, in the highest degree of perfection, every detail quality requisite for any latitude. This presents itself externally in a plain dress, with admirable proportions, giving it the appearance of a choice and tastefully made piece of Cabinet furniture. Internally, the location and capacity of the Chamber is such as to remove effectively the objections often made to Air-Tight Cook-Stoves for every use. The Oven proves itself to be precisely the projector intended it should be, viz. the best and most perfect ever constructed in a family use. The Flues, upon which the great responsibility and reputation of a stove depends, differ from any before used, and are of such construction and quality as to ensure the most perfect draught, with facility to fill up, and are easily kept clean. One hundred of this stove have been sold the year and all have given the utmost satisfaction.

New England Air-Tight,

MISCELLANY.

THE TWO SCHOOLMATES.

Edwin Barry and Seth Manning were school fellows at Chester Academy. The father of Edwin was a lawyer of good standing and some property; the father of Seth was a house carpenter. Mr. Barry, being a lawyer, was of course a "respectable" man, and belonged to a "gentleman" society. Mr. Manning, being a mechanic, was of course very much less respectable than Lawyer Barry, and not admitted into society. The lawyer was a GENTLEMAN, although he wanted charity, love for his neighbor, mercy, and common sympathy with the miseries of others, and withal got tipsy. The carpenter was no "gentleman," although he owed no man anything, was honest in all his dealings, never injured his neighbor, was sober, upright, and industrious. The wide difference between these two, although they went to the same church, lived in the same street, were fed by the same butcher and baker, and breathed the same air, was, that Mr. Barry got his living by a pen and law books, and Mr. Manning by the means of chisels and planks. It may appear surprising to many of my young readers, that such a difference should exist from such simple causes, and that the occupation should so far fix the merit and social position of individuals. This distinction, however, we are pained to say, exists in the world; but as it is founded upon a false basis, and a false system of society, we would seriously caution all young people from being influenced as they enter life, by the foolish prejudices which follow its adoption. For nothing is more unwise than for youths to judge a man by his occupation, or a boy by his father's—nothing so indicative of a weak mind, as to court the society of one because his father is rich, or a lawyer, or doctor; and avoid the company of another because his father is a mechanic—though the former boy may be a mechanic—though the former boy may be vicious, idle and immoral in his habits, and the latter modest, industrious and correct.

Youth cannot too soon learn that the distinctions which they see assigned by those upon them, and extending to their parents, to their friends, to their schoolmates, to their neighbors, to their employer, to their employer, and to their employer, to their employer,

Edwin, as he grew up, became haughty and aristocratic, and prided himself upon his respectability." It was his delight to make boys less fortunate feel his position above them, and boast of the great people he saw at his father's house. One day he was talking with Seth Manning; for he condescended to speak to mechanics' sons, when he could make them listeners to his own vain and silly boasts." Seth, moreover, lived in the same street, and they often fell in together on their way to school, when Edwin, who loved idleness, was willing to avail himself of Seth's more studious habits, to get help in his lessons. On the present occasion, Edwin had just come out of his door, when, seeing Seth approaching from the school, he waited for him to come up. The two were each about sixteen years of age.

As Edward Barry walked towards school with Seth Manning, securing his aid in the lessons, they saw Mary Curtis walking along; and her red shawl attracted at the same time the fury of a cow in the street. Barry retreated; but his companion hastened to the lady's assistance.

Seth soon saw the peril in which pretty Mary was, than, without a thought of himself, he bounded across the road and endeavored to get between the enraged animal and flying girl. Mary fled towards the boarding-school with the speed of fear, while her scarf shawl flying behind her, quickened the pursuit of the animal.

"Cast off your shawl, if possible, Miss Curtis, or fly for the fence," cried Seth, as loud as he could.

Mary tried to disengage it as she flew, but her fingers were too tremulous for her to withdraw the pin; and, as to seek the protection of the fence, as a boy would have first done, she felt she could never climb it, and might be arrested in the attempt. Seth, by using great exertions, at length got abreast of the madened cow, had at the imminent risk of drawing upon himself all her fury, caught by one of her horns and was borne along with her—she tossing back her head and bellowing with rage. He had thrown down all his books, but retained his slate, with the corner of which, holding it in the other hand, he struck her in the eye so well aimed a blow, that she slightly checked her speed, and turned aside against him, just as Mary, overcome by her fright and exertion, stumbled and fell prostrate in her path. In two bounds more the irate animal would have been upon her. The first blow broke the frame of his slate, and with the sharp corner he struck her a second blow, which cut deeply into her temples, and caused her to stagger and then fly, moaning and pawing the earth past the fallen girl, in the direction she had been flying.

Seth watched the cow till he saw her madly descend into a ravine some distance beyond, and then came to Mary, who had already risen, but looked as pale as death.

"I am thankful for your escape, Miss Curtis. I never knew a person in greater danger. Are you hurt?"

Mary could not reply, for agitation and want of breath, but she took one of Seth's hands between both her own, and pressed them with warm and grateful energy, while her eyes were eloquent with her thanks.

"I'm glad you are not hurt. It was Dr. Conway's cow, a vicious creature at all times, and should not be suffered to go on the common. Your scarlet shawl attracted its attention, and that is a color which singularly enough inspires them with rage and a desire to attack it. So you

QUINCY PATRIOT.

Many are of opinion that if it were not for the stringency of the civil law, nearly all families would be broken up, and society go into chaos. We have no such notion. If a proclamation were made to-day declaring every marriage in the Union null and void, and leaving it once more to the choice of parties whether the relation be renewed, business would be suspended, newspapers would stop, stores, factories and workshops would close. The editors would be all at home getting married; merchants, operators and mechanics would each be awaiting their turn to have the nuptial knot re-tied. Cross, fretful, sickly wives, that had been almost felt a burden before, would grow very dear once more, from the thought of separation. Dominating, harsh husbands would be forgiving; and in all cases where a spark of conjugal love remained, it would be blown to a flame—where nothing but dead embers are, the ashes would be taken up made into soap, and society cleansed thereby.

COMPOSITION OF SOILS.

Soils of volcanic origin are known to be remarkable for their great fertility. "The land in the vicinity of Vesuvius, (says Liebig,) may be considered as the type of a fertile soil, and its proportion of clay and sand. This soil being derived from the disintegration of lava, cannot possibly, owing to its origin, contain the smallest trace of vegetable matter; yet every one knows that when lava or volcanic ashes have been exposed for a time to the influence of air and moisture, all kinds of plants grow in them with the utmost luxuriance." It is the same also with newly cleared lands, which have been thoroughly burned. They contain no vegetable matter, and yet are remarkable for their great fertility. And this fertility is understood by all practical men to depend on thorough burning. For if there is a deficiency of combustible matter, on the ground, or if this matter is not sufficiently dry, the mouldering wood and leaves will remain unconsumed, and an ordinary crop is the inevitable consequence.

From these facts it may be inferred, that the fertility of a soil does not depend on the vegetable matter contained in it; but on the amount of its free elements, on the combustible part being entirely burned out, and this process has been employed from time immemorial, not only, in the preparation of new land, but in reclaiming and re-nourishing the old.

It may also be inferred, that by this process the physical, and the chemical conditions of the soil are both changed, and the latest resources developed—that the elements are set free from old compounds, the inert matter changed to an active state and prepared for absorption by the leaves and rootlets of a new generation of plants.

The process of burning, however, does not make all soils equal. Soils are found to be very unequal in their mineral elements requisite to the greatest fertility. And this leads to the consideration of one of the most important points connected with the subject; to what may be considered the first requisite in the art of cultivation, that is, to the composition of a fertile soil—the different elements required—their proportion—and the office of each in the nutrition and growth of plants.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION. The annual meeting of the Norfolk County Teachers Association, was held on Monday and Tuesday of the present week at Cohasset.

The meeting was well attended—about a hundred or more teachers were present. Valuable and useful lectures were delivered by Mr. Philbrick of the Quincy School Boston; by Dr. Sears, Secretary of the Board of Education and by Mr. Green, teacher at Milton.

Interesting discussions, were had on Moral discipline in schools and other subjects.

The following persons were chosen for Officers the ensuing year viz:—

President—George Newcomer, Esq., of Quincy. Vice Presidents—Simmon Burrows, and John Kneeland, Dorchester; D. B. Hagar, of Roxbury. Recording Secretary—C. J. Caven, Dedham. Corresponding Secretary—Elwell Woodbury, of Dorchester.

Treasurer—Isaac Swan, Dorchester. Counsellors—Messrs. Levi Dodge, A. Alden D. B. Wheeler and David H. Daniels.

We should infer from what we have seen and heard, respecting the convention, that it was one of the most profitable and interesting meetings, ever held by the Society.

LATER NEWS FROM CUBA. The Cuba correspondence is laid before the Senate. It is voluminous. The Spanish Minister constantly kept Mr. Clayton advised of the invading movement, by information from Spanish agents. In one of his letters, Calderon de la Barca complains bitterly of the Sun, and appeals to the Secretary of State for its prosecution as a disturber of the peace; but no allusion is made to it in Mr. Clayton's answer.

The instructions sent to the naval commanders require, in the event of invasion, that all supplies under the American flag shall be stopped. This will be debated in the Senate, as involving a suspension of trade.

Mr. Clayton has written two letters to the American Consul at Havana, instructing him in relation to American citizens taken prisoners. He is to insist that a distinction shall be made between men committing and those captured under a mere intention to commit crime, and that the prisoners captured in or near a Mexican Island, not having committed any crime against Spain, are not subject to punishment in Cuba. Mr. Campbell, our consul at Havana had already moved in the matter, in a letter to Count de Alcey, the Captain-General of Cuba.

ARTILLERY ELECTION. Governor Briggs, wore on this occasion, the uniform of Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of Massachusetts, may—more—he wore the appearance of the true Patriot and Soldier. Can every man of the ancient and Hon. Artillery who paraded on that day say the same of himself?

HUMANITAS.

THE STING OF DEATH. As your sheet has always been liberal respecting moral, religious and philosophical matter, I would like to inquire through its columns, What is the Sting of Death? Can a better definition of it be given than that it is the abandonment of all duties to the living in the hour of sickness, and of failing humanity, by relatives and friends?

WE would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of N. B. Furnal, in another column, and we hope his friends will patronize him liberally.

TRADESMEN'S HOTEL. John Bryant, the veritable Bryant, who formerly kept the La Grange House in Union Street, has now opened a new hotel at No 22 Union Street, a few doors westward of his old stand, where he is ready to meet not only his old patrons, but the public generally. His arrangements are now good—he has an entrance for gentlemen and their wives distinct from the bar-room, besides excellent accommodations for carriages and horses—and as to his tables none can find fault with his fare—it is always good—and his old friends in this place will doubtless give him a call. A good landlord deserves encouragement.

BUILDING SITES, ETC. Attention is directed to the advertisement of Harvey Field, Esq., who offers pleasant building sites and a good house, cheap for cash. His motto is "quick sales and cash bargains."

BANK ROBBERY. The Dorchester and Milton Bank, was broken into on Saturday night last, and robbed of about forty thousand dollars. The robbers, in order to get at the deposits went through four locks with false keys, and through two others with the aid of gunpowder. Of the money stolen, twenty-nine thousand dollars was in bills of the bank robbed, and four hundred and forty-four dollars in bills of other banks. Besides this, there were between two and three thousand dollars in gold and silver coin stolen. The villains, after having obtained their booty, closed the doors, and placed the strap over the key holes of the outside door of the vault, just as they had found it, with the alphabetical padlock fastened at the same letter which it had been by the cashier. In their haste in leaving the premises, they, about a quarter of a mile from the banking room, dropped in the road a package of their booty, on the Dorchester and Milton Bank, which was found early Sunday morning, and led to the discovery of the robbery. The robbers also carried away seven hundred dollars in unsigned twenty dollar bills, a considerable lot of plates and the seal of the Bank. The total loss is thirty-one thousand twelve dollars and ninety cents. There was left in the vault three bags of gold, containing in all three thousand five hundred sixty-three dollars. The gold was in a corner of the vault, and was screened from view by a piece of board, accidentally, placed before it. A trunk was also left, containing fifteen thousand eight hundred and sixteen dollars in bills of the Bank. A man who slept in a store opposite the Bank, heard the explosion at about one o'clock, got up and looked out of the window, but seeing nothing out of the way returned to bed. Two trunks stolen from the Bank, were found Monday morning in the dock at Leverett's wharf in Boston; also a lot of keys, and sundry papers. The papers found were the property of the Bank.

Two thousand dollars reward is offered for the detection of the offenders.

POETRY.

"HOPE FOR HUMANITY."

"New light is kindling on the horizon's edge,
The eyelids of the morn will shortly open,
The frozen heart of the cold world begins
To pass from a deep shadow;—there is hope!"

"The plough of coming harvests hath been set
For a deep furrow;—God will send the rain,
And men of honest hearts and resolute souls
Shall bind us with singing the ripe sheaves of [grain].

"The seals are taken from the book; and, lo!
The beautiful lesson of its leaves is love;
And man begins to feel that Christian faith
Blesses this life as well as that above."

"Long with their empty pitchers did they wait,
The dwellers of the desert, and long pray,
Not vainly;—Jacob hath appeared at last,
And from the well's mouth rolled the stone

[away].

"The blest humanities of Christ the Lord,
So fly through long centuries understood,
Have wrought out practice, from conviction of
The true and universal brotherhood."

"The tree is planted, whose sweet leaves shall heal
The wounded bosom of the Church, and wide Soundeth the stroke of the strong hammer that Shall break in countless pieces human pride."

"The letters of the slave shall rust and snap,
And the worn captive be redeemed from wrong;
Though in God's temple yet the clank of chains Breaks the deep music of the Sabbath song."

"For light is kindling on the horizon's edge,
The eyelids of the morn will shortly open;
The frozen heart of the cold world begins
To pass from a deep shadow;—there is hope!"

A VOICE WITHIN.

"There is a voice within me,
And 'tis so sweet a voice,
That its soft lisps win me,
Till tears start to mine eyes;
Deep from my soul it springeth,
Like hidden melody;
And evermore it singeth
This song of song to me;
This world is full of beauty,
As other worlds above;
And if we did our duty,
It might be full of love!"

THE YOUNG BRIDE.

"Young bride,—a smile for thee!
To shine away thy sorrow,
For heaven is kind to day, and we
Will hope as well to morrow.

"Young bride,—a prayer for thee!
That all thy hopes possessing,
Thy soul may praise her God, and he May crown thee with his blessing."

POLITENESS

Said Mrs. Smith, "My dearest Sydney, Let me help you to this kidney."

Then answered Smith,—"You're so polite,
I think, my dear, I'll take a bite
If you will eat the other part;
I wish you would with all my heart."

"No, no; arrange it on my plan,
And take the whole, my dearest man;
You like kidney—I like fat;
And so, my dear, we've settled, we've settled

[that.]

FIST MORAL.

There is no time to show your breeding,
So proper as the time you're feeding.

SECOND MORAL.

Instead of kicking up a breeze,
Of which there is no need,
If married people tried to please
They always could succeed.

ANECDOTES.

"I am very lucky for an editor, or in fact, any business man, to dream of mosquitoes; it betokens danger that will settle their bills."

"To dream of books is unfavorable it denotes that you are 'booked' for a small amount."

"When a young lady dreams of walking out, it is an omen that angers no good to the husband; he may expect a bustle to follow."

"For a tailor to dream of being imprisoned, is a general admonition that his last lot of cabbage was altogether too extensive.

"When a young man, who has spent a goodly portion of the night at an inn, dreams of seeing the devil, it denotes that other spirits have fallen."

"To dream you are a pig behoves you to guard well your tongue, lest you turn out a boar.

"If a fashional lady dreams that she was asked to sing, it is taken that she is undoubtedly catching cold.

"If a printer dreams of starving to death, foretells an abundance of 'pie.'

"For a coquette to dream of a large waist, admonishes her that she is waisting away the best part of her life in idle flirtations.

"To dream of colors is bad, as it most generally turns out to be a duy.

"A queer excuse was once made by an old lady. The good woman was abominated to appear as a witness in a rather delicate case. She did not come, and a bench warrant was issued for her appearance, on which she was brought into court. The presiding judge thought it his duty to reprimand her:—

"Madam, why were you not here before?"

"I could not come, sir."

"Were you not subpoenaed, madam?"

"Yes, sir, but I was sick."

"What was the matter, madam?"

"I had an awful bilie, sir."

"After a pause—'Upon your honor, madam?'

"No, sir; upon my—arm!"

Removal.

THE subscriber takes this method to inform his customers, and the public, that he has moved to the new building lately erected by Mr. Samuel Copeland, in being more commodious and better adapted to his business; and also, would tender his sincere thanks for the liberal share of trade which he has received during the past year. Former customers and the public generally are invited to call, where will be found a variety of Stoves, of which is the

being in the highest degree of perfection, every quality requisite for any latitude. This presents itself externally in a plain dress, with admirable proportions, giving it the appearance of a chaste and tastefully made piece of Cabinet furniture.

Intrinsically, the location and capacity of the Chamber is such as to remove effectually the objection to the Air-Tight Cook-Stoves for general use. The Owner promises to be precisely his projectors intended it should be, viz.

the most perfect ever constructed for any purpose.

The Flues, upon which the great responsibility of a stove depends, differ from any before used, and are of such construction and quality as to ensure the most perfect draught, with ability to fill up, and are easily kept clean, by one hundred of these stoves have been sold the year and all have given the utmost satisfaction.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

the use of our seldom used, lumbering family-coach for the coming event, she became consol'd, more particularly as Lindores offered to be her escort, and to deposit her safely at the gates. All that night the snow continued to descend; and alarming accounts reached us of wayfarers missing, to say nothing of the perishing cattle on the hills; therefore our consternation may be imagined when, at a late hour, as the shadows of evening were gathering over the gloomy landscape, we were informed, on seeking Beatrice in her apartment, whether she often retired for hours, that she had been seen to quit our valley at an early hour of the day mounted on her mettlesome pony, and attended only by Neptune; nor had she yet returned. She had been seen by some laborers speeding past Donniwell Church, a lonely edifice on the edge of a moor, and in the direct route to the Priory. This was hours ago.

And now the house was in confusion, for every one loved Beatrice, despite her naughty, teasing ways; for her's was the open heart and liberal hand, and the tongue was the uncouth member which led Beatrice into all her scrapes.

As to the grave, stately, and somewhat indolent Lindores, he exhibited symptoms of so contrary a nature to his usual wont, that Miss Sowerby, who shared to the full in our alarm and anxiety, incoherently exclaimed, 'Well-a-day! Lindores, my dear, it's very good of you to be so brisk about the safety of one you don't overmuch love.' But Lindores heard her not; he was off in search of the tenant, alone over the dreary hills and moors, desiring proper persons to follow on his track with lanterns and requisite assistance.

Lindores knew the danger far better than we did of being lost on the trackless wastes, and his countenance betrayed horror when he heard of his young cousin's escapade. The only words he uttered were, 'Towards the Priory, you say? I see—I understand it all!'

Lindores had not proceeded far when he met Neptune returning home in haste. With gestures of unbound'd joy he recognised the colonel; and turning back, as he looked up in his face with a piteous whine, the faithful animal kept the unerring direction towards Donniwell Church; and there, in the deserted porch, nearly stiffened with cold, pain, and terror, was Beatrice Delville. Her pony had slipped, rolled down a bank with her, and broken both its own legs. She fortunately escaped without broken bones, but so sorely bruised, that after vain trying to make her way amid the snow-drifts, she gave it up, and 'came back here to die,' Lindores, she faintly murmured, as he wrapped her in his vestments, and tenderly supported her frail and trembling form.

'Thank Heaven I have done what I had to do!' she continued in a scarcely and bleached whisper; and I am deeply thankful this accident befall me on my return.'

'From whence, Beatrice?'
 'Don't ask me now, Lindores. All I grieve for is the misery I have caused you all. I deserve my punishment were it ten times worse.'

'It is bad enough,' said Lindores softly, as he gazed upon her pale cheek, and a deep cut on her fair forehead, from which the blood was oozing frightfully. 'No need for explanation, Beatrice; I guess your secret.'

There was no response. The head fell listlessly on his shoulder; and the domestics coming up, Miss Delville was speedily conveyed home, where it was many weeks ere she came forth from a sick chamber. Long she hovered betwixt life and death, owing to internal injuries received in her fall. But a fine constitution triumphed, and she joined the family circle when the tender buds and green foliage made glad the face of nature, heralding the approach of spring.

During her slow and tedious convalescence, Beatrice found more pleasure in listening to Miss Sowerby's oft-repeated accounts of her visit to the Priory, than any other theme of conversation afforded. The two days had been extended to a fortnight. Nor had Lady Ann's kindness ceased here; for ever since Miss Delville's accident and consequent illness, Miss Sowerby had received sumptuous presents of fruit and flowers from the great lady, which she with pride and pleasure immediately set forth in the chamber of the invalid. And when Beatrice attempted remonstrances, not wishing to be the only one benefited by such lavish generosity, Miss Sowerby would hint, with a mysterious nod of the head, that Lady Ann knew the destination of her gifts and wished it to be so. 'For,' said the good creature, 'my dear lady knows that she can afford me no pleasure in a life like that of ministering to the sick.' Nor did she ever suspect that Lady Ann Tyrconnel felt a deeper interest in the sufferer than that which arose from Beatrice being a member of the family with whom she (Miss Sowerby) sojourned. Unweariedly did Beatrice listen to the old lady's raptures. They were the best friends possible now. And how had all this been brought about? Beatrice was ill—altered both in character and person; for the long dark hours in a sick-room had given her leisure to commune with her own heart; and the nearly fatal accident, when she crept into Donniwell porch for shelter, had left a scar for life.

The scar detracted from her beauty considerably in the eyes of strangers; but Lindores seemed to look upon it with peculiar affection, as gentle, subdued, and thoughtful. He lifted his eyes to Beatrice, for the first time since her recovery, on the docile Arab steed, whispering as he did so—' Fairly won, dear Beatrice, and your own forever!' There was more in those words than met the ear, to judge from the blushes and confusion exhibited by her to whom they were addressed.

'Ah, Lindores,' exclaimed Beatrice when their marriage-day was fixed, 'you guessed my secret marvellously.'

'Which secret, dear Beatrice?' responded her lover, archly smiling.

Turning away with a pretty assumed displeasure, she replied, 'You know what I mean—sir, vastly well—My secret expedition to the Priory in that horrible snow-storm, when I cast myself on Lady Ann's mercy, and confessed the cruel trick I had played off on Miss Sowerby, by sending her a false invitation in a forged name. Yes, Lindores, I call it forgery; and I was indeed humbled to the dust before the proud, stately lady of Tyrconnel. But she was pitying and gracious when she heard my confession, and gladly promised to receive her poor errant governess, whose oddities and simplicity she remembered. Thus the remembered. Thus the result has been beneficial to Miss Sowerby, and I only hope, Lindores, that she may never know the means by which she was brought to Lady Ann's remembrance in reality; and this because I would save her from mortification, and not screen my own guilt.'

'I am sure of that, my Beatrice,' replied Lindores; 'your sufferings have more than excused your offence.'

'Ah, I wish I could think so,' said the weeping girl; 'but at any rate I have learned an invaluable lesson, never to play off such dangerous jokes again, and to warn others from doing so. Had Lady Ann been unfeeling or obtuse, what would become of poor Miss Sowerby? I don't think she would have survived the cruel disappointment after all her grand preparations and harmless boasting.'

'I think, Beatrice,' said Colonel Lindores gravely, 'you would have been the most painful part of the business in deceiving our poor old cousin, whose dependence on us is her best protection. We have indeed much cause to be grateful to Lady Ann Tyrconnel, whose ready sympathy relieved you from a load of care.'

It has made Miss Sowerby so happy too, hesitatingly murmured Beatrice; 'and you must suffer this ugly scar to remind you that while it pleads for me, Lindores.'

'Ah, Beatrice,' he replied, 'say no more; you have fairly won both the Arab steed and his master!'—Chamber's Journal.

TENACITY TO LIFE.

Men cling to life with an unyielding grasp;—and many, whose greatest annoyance is the thought that it will one day escape them, are yet constantly inveighing against it as a thing almost intolerable.

They complain of the pain as thorny, rugged, and wearisome, but are ever tormented with the fear that they shall too soon come to its termination. It is a sweet curse, both too long and too short. The days the months, and the years, they charge with tardiness, and wish them ended—to tax invention to the utmost to manufacture wings, for the lingering moments—and when they have fled, regret that they made such speed, and wish them back. The moments when passing, move too slowly; when passed, they have gone too soon. Such is inconsistent man. He impatiently wishes to-day would give place for to-morrow, and yet every successive morrow advance him toward the dreaded termination, anxious to try every untried day except the last, impatient to make an acquaintance with every portion of life except its close, in hope to find each successive day more propitious than the past. He quarrels with life because it does not bless him loves it because it has a blessing for him, and clings to it in hope to evoke that blessing, but seeks it neither with the spirit nor with the understanding. We must understand what life is, and what it proposes to do for us, in order to make the most of it. They who cherish it for its own sake, as an end, and not as a means—do not understand its nature and design. It can not satisfy the vast desires of the immortal mind. They call for more than would ten thousand times exhaust its resources. Men strive with life by trying to elicit from it donations of enjoyment which it cannot give, because it has not the means; they quarrel with it for being so destitute of benevolence as not to give them what it does not possess, and cannot command. This is like complaining of a drop of water, because it is not the ocean; or censuring a molehill, because it is not the universe. The man who should mistake the portico for the parlor, and then curse it because it is neither spacious enough nor warm enough to satisfy his expectations, would justly incur ridicule. Life is but the portico of our existence, and he who mistakes it for the whole life deserves not to be ridiculed, but to be regarded with some graver emotion, for indeed he has made a disastrous mistake. He will find it to narrow to satisfy the infinitely-expanding desires of the soul, and cold enough to freeze up its ardor.

Childhood looks forward with anxious expectation to youth; youth, dissatisfied, pants for manhood; disappointed manhood, pants for man; and despairing age looks back censoriously upon the whole course of life, and is vexed that its 'wood, hay, and stubble' were not 'gold, silver, and precious stones.'

And yet man is unwilling to part with life, because he has made it his treasure, and has no treasure beyond. But to him who regards life as merely the infancy of his existence, and uses it well, its best quality is that it has a termination, for that termination is his introduction to a priceless treasure, which he has spent his life in accumulating. The man who has acted well his part, can hail with liveliest emotion of joy his exit, which leads him out of a field of labor and care into a boundless field of un-alled enjoyment. It becomes mortal man then to be wise, to take life for what it is, to remember that it has an end, and compel every period of it to make a donation of happiness to the last hour, to seize upon every day as it passes, and say to it as it did the patriarch to the wrestling angel, 'I will not let thee go except thou bless me.'

(For the Quincy Patriot.)

Mr. Editor—I observe in your last, an earnest inquiry from a correspondent, as to 'What is the Sting of Death?' I know not whether to be most amazed at his woful ignorance, or pleased at his honesty; but at all events, he could not have done better than to apply for information through your paper. It is ever my delight, O, my beloved brother, Humanitas, to enlighten the ignorant, guide the wandering, strengthen the weak, and teach the "young idea how to shoot." I therefore hasten to give you the desired information.

And first, I must inform you that your idea about the "Sting of Death" is altogether erroneous; but I do not blame you but rather pity. It was said years ago by a preacher of righteousness, that in your town, "great ignorance of the Bible prevailed," and he was persecuted for it as a libel; but we now see how true it was. O, my dear friend, suffering in the depths of darkness and despair in consequence of the want of a guide and instructor, how rejoiced I am to be able to help you.

There is an old Book of which you perhaps have heard, which was once published under the auspices of that philanthropic and never-enough-to-be-commended organ, the "Mass. Bible Society," called the Holy Scriptures. If you have not the means to buy one at half the cost, they will give you one and I will speak to the Agent about it the next time I see him. Therein you will find two Epistles, vulgarly called Letters, which were written to the Corinthians of old. Take the first one, and in the 15th chap. 56th verse, you will find a very sensible answer to your inquiry, which to save your time I will give, viz:

"The sting of death is sin." Not as you think in your innocence and ignorance, "that it is the abandonment of all duties to the living in the hour of sickness, and of failing humanity, by relatives and friends?" How such an idea ever came into your head I am at a loss to conceive. I think you must have very poor and deluded preachers, or else very ignorant ones. But I forbear.

But compare your idea with the one set forth in that Book from which I have quoted. How mysterious and mysterious yours, how simple and sublime this is. Strange you should not have heard of it. I am thankful that I have been taught better things; that I do not grope in such total darkness; but I approve of your exertions to gain light and knowledge. Keep on, my dear friend, and in time you will become enlightened even as we.

Yours, affectionately,

BEATRICE.

THE FAIR. This entertainment at the Town Hall, during the present week, passed off to the gratification of the large number who participated, and resulted in a generous donation for the object intended. We have been promised a full account for our next number. The following Ode is from the pen of Jeffrey R. Brackett, Esq., of Boston:

Dedicated and Presented to the Ladies' Committee —FOR THE—
PURCHASE OF AN ORGAN,
QUINCY, JUNE 13, 1850.

As amid Eden's bowers,
Pure worship first was paid,

The incense cups, were opening flowers,

The birds the music made;

And when the human voices sung,
All nature in the chorus rung.

When from the garden driven,
Issued the fallen race,

All joyful harmony was given,

And discord took its place;

Upbraiding words, fill on the ears,

Gushed from the eyes remorseful tears.

Twas vainly Jules tried

To move this sulken cloud,

Nor triumphed Miriam's hymn of pride,

Nor David's harp-notes loud;

One chord was wanting, and that woke

When Christmas morn, the darkness broke.

Then went Te Deum forth

Over the joyous earth,

And diaphonous south and north,

Pronounced the Saviour's birth.

That heaven and earth again might meet

In one full symphony complete.

The shepherds on the pains

First caught the glad sound,

They listened to heavenly strains,

While grateful hearts, and voices gay,

Joined in the cheerful roundelay.

Thus, let us sing His praise,

To Whom all praise belongs,

All worship the warm heart can raise

Inspire our zealous songs;

Standing in awe before His throne

While swells the solemn organ's tone.

THE greatest labor-saving article yet discovered.

By use, washing machines and wash boards are entirely dispensed with, and not one quarter of the labor is required to do the washing of a family.

The Fluid is a chemical compound of sufficient strength to extract all foreign substances from the clothes, and without the slightest injury to the material.

The expense is not more than that of the soap or detergent used, and besides it will be seen that the great wear and tear of clothing consequent upon the old method of hard rubbing upon a board, and the use of the pounding barrel, is wholly avoided, an immense saving is thus made. It is emphatically the female's friend.

POETRY.

THE WORLD AS IT IS.

This is not so bad a world
As some would like to make it;
Though, whether good, or whether bad
Depends on how we take it,
For if we scold and fret all day,
From dewy morn till even;
This world will ne'er afford to man
A foretaste here of heaven.

This world is as good a world
As ever was known to any;
Who have not seen another yet;
(And these are very many);
And if the men and women too,
Have plenty of enjoyment,
Those surely must be had to please,
Who cannot find enjoyment.

This world is quite a clever world,
In rain or pleasant weather,
If people would but learn to live
In harmony together—
Nor seek to burst the kindly bond
By love and peace cemented,
And learn that best of lessons yet
To always be contented.

Then were the world a pleasant world,
And pleasant folks were in it;
The day would pass most pleasantly,
To those who thus begin it;
And all the nameless grievances
Brought on by borrowed troubles,
Would prove, as certainly they are,
A mass of empty bubbles!

THE CRUMBLE HORND COW.

Let sky be o'ercast with a sorrowing cloud;
Let earth be enshrouded in a funeral shroud.
Let voice of the weeper lift on high,
Like wailing of winds when the tempests sweep by;
For sad the misfortune that visits us now,
We mourn for the crumple horn'd cow.

Y Muses, who oft have descended to earth,
And turned my wild harp to the music of mirth;
Oh come once again from your home in the skies!
But come not in gladness; let tears dim your eyes!
Let the dark mourning eypress o'ershadow his brow,
As ye sing the sad fate of the crumple horn'd cow.

Oh give me the hoarsness of old Ocean's roar,
When billows beat madly the rock frowning shore;
Give the raven's deep ronk, the hoot of the owl—
The panther's wild scream, or the prairie wolf's howl—

Then with my wailings, I'll teach the world how
To mourn the sad fate of the crumple horn'd cow.

Oh give me the lips of a Nestor, to tell
The merits of Crumble, while here she did dwell;
But half her good parts tongue never can speak
In the space of a day, or the lapse of a week;
For queen of good cattle, the world will allow,
Was she we're lamenting, the crumple horn'd cow.

Her color was red, and her hair was like silk,
She gave ev'ry morning three gallons of Milk;
When day with us toils and its troubles was o'er,
She gave in the evening full three gallons more—
These never did stand at the rack of the mow,
So gaudy a beast as the crumple horn'd cow.

Still more—she was blest with a heart and a mind;
For to goodness and looks, she e'er seem'd inclined—
How oft has she marched through this echoing hall,
And breath'd in the chapel her low solemn bawl—
So wise, and so thoughtful, so pious I trow,
Was she we're lamenting, the crumple horn'd cow.

Full often when night hung her shade o'er the land,
Has the student stol forth with bucket in hand—
The lamps were all dark; but the stars upon high,
As they knowingly peeped from out the blue sky,
Did wink at the moon as they silent saw now.
The milk that was robb'd from the crumple horn'd cow.

But the blessings of earth were ne'er made to last;
And the things we love most, how soon they are past!

They ever are changing and fleeting away,
Another sure sign that we tend to decay,
My dear fellow students, is giving us now
In the sad death of the crumple horn'd cow.

If dumb brutes have spirits, as many believe—
Let us dry up our tears; for why should we grieve?
Her life was so just while she wander'd below,
She's gone to the land where the good cattle go;
And there she is rev'ling in green pastures now
Where nothing can trouble the crumple horn'd cow.

While the lightning of youth shall flash from my eye,
And the moments of life dance merrily by—
When the prime of my days shall press me with care

When old age shall sprinkle its frost o'er my hair,
And time with its anger shall frown my brow—
I still shall remember the crumple horn'd cow.

ANECDOTES.

"I like to buy peaches of you," said Mr. Tonts to a big, overgrown vendor, "because they look so nice and clean."

"Yes," replied the merchant, "it's myself as takes the pains wid 'em; and haven't I worn the jacket on me in wipen' em wid it, to be sure? And didn't I lave off tobacco, the 'ud give a bad complexion to 'em?"

"Well," said Mr. Tonts, in a tremulous tone, "I don't know as I care about any now, you can keep the cent." Mr. Tonts felt hurt.

"Benny," enquired our friend Steve, addressing a friend the other day, "what do you consider worst of the numerous ills now prevalent?" "Abolitionism?" replied his friend, inquiringly. "No," "Socialism?" "No," "Nativism?" "No, no." "Then I must give it up," replied he— "Expound?" "Why, Rheumatism—I've got it in every bone in my body, and it is worse than all the others combined," replied the wag.

Removal.

THE subscriber takes this method to inform his customers and the public, that he has moved to the new building lately erected by Mr. Samuel Copeland, it being more commodious and better adapted to his business. And he would tender his sincere thanks for the liberal share of patronage which he has received during the past year. His former customers and the public generally are invited to call, where will be found a variety of Stoves, among which is the

New England Air-Tight,

embodied in the highest degree of perfection, every essential quality requisite for any latitude.

This stove presents itself in a plain dress, with and admirable proportions, giving it the appearance of a chaste and tastefully made piece of Cabinet urniture. Internally, the location and capacity of the Fire Chamber is such as to remove effectually the objection often made to Air-Tight Cook-Stoves for practical use. The Oven proves itself to be precisely what its projectors intended it should be: the greatest and most perfect ever constructed in a family stove. The question which the great responsibility and reputation of a stove depends, differ from any one before used, and are of such construction and capacity as to ensure the most perfect draught, with out liability to fill up, and are easily kept clean.

Early one hundred of this stove have been sold the past year and all have given the utmost satisfaction.

Also—A variety of PARLOR, OFFICE and CYL-

INDER STOVES, together with a good assortment of TIN, BRITANIA, SHEET IRON and Japaned Ware.

THE YANKEE SCHOOLMASTER.

In the course of my wanderings, when seeking for employment, an advertisement in the Onionville Gazette, Connecticut, informed me that the school committee of that literary town were in want of a teacher. Candidates for this application to Squire Zephaniah Giles, the chairman, at whose house the examination of the master was to take place. I was seized with ambition to fill the throne of office, and accordingly presented myself to the School Committee, with whom I found Giles, Deacon Simpson, the store-keeper, and Mr. Gregory Statute, a village lawyer, rose to receive me graciously. The raw-boned Vermonter, whose name I found was Increase Peasely, and a rascal candidate, retained his seat and eyed me superciliously.

'I come, gentlemen,' said I, 'to offer myself as a candidate for the vacant office of instructor.'

'How! how!' shouted Increase. 'How sassy! Why, you ain't half big enough to go to a school, much less to teach one.'

'Shut up your head!' cried Squire Giles, authoritatively; 'who set you up as Judge and Jury? What's your name, young man?'

'Herbert Stanly,' was the proper response.

'Yes, I know it. Wall, I'll proceed right away to examine you. Best way to take it by the flock—I know it. First place, readin'; you can read I spose. Yes, I know it. Then spellin'; I like your looks; spell tater—T A T A. T E R ter, tater; that's the way—oh, yes! I know it. Then as for cipherin'; Rule of Three—Geography—Boundaries of Connecticut cut. I spose you're up that ere! You nod your head; yes; I know it.'

All this was uttered with volubility. The fact was, that Squire Giles had taken a fancy to me; and as he was the richest man in Onionville, and led the School Committee by the nose, could always indulge his fancies without opposition. His summary method of conducting an examination, however, gave great offence to Increase Peasely.

'I tell you what,' said Squire, 'I said he, 'this here isn't far play. You're an old man, Squire, an old white-headed fellar; but seemin' as how you're pretty well in years, and as how you're my Jemima's father, I won't lick you.'

As for Deacon Simpson and the lawyer, they're beneath my notice; but if this ere dandy goes to please you, Jemima. Glad to see ye, by Jehosiph! Though, to be sure, I didn't mind what folks have been saying about you and the master—darn his eyes!'

THE ORPHAN BOY.

"He faded, yet so calmly weak,
So gently wan, so sweetly weak."

The bustle of the fight was over; the prisoners had been secured, and the decks washed down, the watch pried, and the schooner had once more relapsed into midnight quiet and repose. I sought my hammock and soon fell asleep. But my slumbers were disturbed by wild dreams, which, like the visions of a fever, agitated and unnerved me; the last strife the hardships of my early life and a thousand other things twirled together as figures in a phantasmagoria. Suddenly a hand was laid on my shoulder, and starting up I beheld the surgeon's mate.

At once I sprang from my hammock. Little Dick was a sort of protege of mine. He was a pale, delicate child, said to be an orphan and used in gentle nurture; and from the first hour I joined the schooner, my heart yearned towards him, for I too, had once been friendless and alone in the world. He had often talked to me in confidence of his mother whose memory he regarded with holy reverence, while to the other boys of the ship he, had little to say; for they were rude and coarse, he, delicate and sensitive. Often, when they jeered him for his melancholy, he would go apart by himself and weep. He never complained of his lot, though his companions imposed on him continually. Poor lad his heart was in the grave with his lost parents.

I took a strange interest in him, and had lightened his task as much as possible. During the late fight I had owed my life to him; for he rushed in just as a sabre stroke was levelled at me; and by interposing his feebly cutlass had averted the deadly blow. In the hurry and confusion since, I had quite forgotten to inquire whether he was hurt, though, at the time, I had inwardly resolved to exert all my little influence to procure him a midshipman's warrant in requital for his service. It was with a pang of reproachful agony, therefore, that I leaped to my feet.

"My God!" I exclaimed; "you don't mean it? He is not dying?"

"I fear, sir," said the messenger shaking his head sadly, "that he cannot live till morning."

"And I have been lying idle here!" I exclaimed with remorse. "Lead me to him."

"He is delirious, but at the intervals of lucidity he asks for you, sir" and as the man spoke, we stood beside the bed of the boy.

The sufferer did not lie in his hammock, as it was hung in the very midst of the crew, and the close air around it was so stifling, that he had been carried under the open hatchway and laid there in a little space of about four feet square. From the sound of the ripples, I judged the vessel was in motion, while the clear calm, blue sky, seen through the opening overhead, and dotted with myriads of stars, betokened that the fog had broken away. How calm it smiled down on the wan face of the dying boy. Occasionally a light current of wind—oh! how deliciously cool in that pent up hold—eddied down the hatchway, and lifted the dark chestnut locks of the sufferer, as with his head resting on the lap of an old veteran, he lay in an inquiet slumber. His shirt collar was unbuttoned, and his childish bosom, as white as that of a girl, was opened and exposed. He breathed quick and heavily. The sound of which he was dying had been intensely painful, but within the last half hour had somewhat lulled, though even now his thin fingers tightly grasped the bed clothes as if he suffered the greatest agony.

A battle stained and gray-haired seaman stood beside him, holding a dull lantern in his hand and gazing sorrowfully down upon the sufferer. The surgeon knelt, with his finger upon the boy's pulse. As I approached, they all looked up. The veteran who held him, shook his head, and would have spoken, but the tents gathered over chokingly in his eyes.

The surgeon said—

"He is going fast—poor little fellow—do you see this?" as he spoke he lifted up a rich gold locket which had lain upon the boy's breast. "He has seen better days."

I could not answer for my heart was full—here was the being to whom a few hours before, I had owed my life—a poor, slight, unprotected child—lying before me, with death already written on his brow—and yet I had never sought him out after the conflict. How bitterly my heart reproached me at that hour. They noticed my agitation, and his old friend, the seaman that held his head, said sadly—

"Poor little Dick—you'll never see the shore you have wished for so long. But there'll be more than one, when your log's out," he spoke with emotion—"to mourn over you."

Suddenly the little fellow opened his eyes and looked vacantly around.

"Has he come yet?" he asked in a low voice. "Why won't he come?"

"I am here, said I, taking the little fellow's hand, "don't you know me, Dick?"

He smiled faintly in my face. He then said—

"You have been kind to me, sir, kinder than many people are to a poor orphan boy. I have no way to show my gratitude—unless you will take the Bible you will find in my trunk. It's a small offering, I know, but it's all I have."

I burst into tears; he recurred—

"Doctor, I'm dying mint 13," said the little fellow, "for my sight grows dim. God bless you, Mr. Danforth."

"Can I do nothing for you, Dick?" said I; "you saved my life. I would coin my blood to buy yours."

"I have nothing to ask—I don't want to live

—only, if it's possible, let me be buried by my mother—you'll find the name of the place, and all about it in my trunk."

"Anything, everything, my poor lad," I answered soothingly.

The little fellow smiled faintly—it was like an angel's smile—but he did not answer. His eyes were fixed on the stars flickering in that patch of blue sky overhead. His mind wandered.

"It's a long—long ways up there—but there are bright angels among them. Mother used to say that I would meet her there."

How near they come and I see sweet faces smiling on me from among them. Hark! is that music? and lifting his finger, he seemed listening for a moment. He fell back, and the old veteran burst into tears—the child was dead. Did he indeed hear angel's voices? God grant it—National Intelligencer.

QUINCY SAVINGS BANK.

At the Annual Meeting of the members of this Institution, the following gentlemen were elected Officers for 1850—51:—

President—Thomas Greenleaf.

Vice President—Josiah Brigham.

Trustees—Thomas Greenleaf, Josiah Brigham, George W. Beale, John M. Gourgas, Lewis Bass, John Savil, Whitecomb Porter, Nathaniel White, Henry Wood, James Newcomb, Lysander Richards.

Treasurer—Israel W. Monroe.

Board of Investment—The Vice President, Treasurer, George W. Beale, Lewis Bass, Daniel Baxter.

The following Report of the Treasurer, was read and accepted:—

In compliance with the by-laws of the Institution, the Treasurer hereby submits to the Trustees his tenth semi-annual Report, with the account current annexed.

The sum of $102,395.45, has been received from 601 depositors; $44,751.76 has been withdrawn, leaving the amount now on deposit, $57,633.69; and the accounts of 216 depositors have been closed.

It is proposed that the Trustees declare the customary dividends which require the sum of $1270.24, $50,656.00 being entitled to 2 1/2 per cent. for six months, and $4,548.00 to 1 1/4 per cent. for three months.

After deducting the sums above named, and the expenses of the Institution (except the salary of the Treasurer for the last year) from the amount of earnings since the Bank went into operation, there will remain a surplus of profits of $1740.63.

The period fixed by the by-laws has now arrived, for making an extra dividend of the surplus profits of the last five years, among the depositors whose accounts have been opened at least one year.

The aggregate amount of 290 accounts entitled to a share in this dividend is $63,882.24. A dividend of 22 per cent on this sum will take $1405.41 of the surplus profits and leave a balance of 334.62.

The Board of Investment recommend that the Trustees declare an extra dividend of 22 per cent, on their ordinary dividends for the last five years, to be apportioned among such depositors as are entitled to the same under the by-laws of the Institution.

$100.00 deposited five years ago, no part of the principal or dividends having been withdrawn will amount to $34.00 being 6 1/2 per cent per annum simple interest.

The depositor of $100.00 five years ago who has withdrawn his semi-annual dividends as they were declared is now entitled to an extra dividend of 5.50 making the whole amount received by him 20.50 being 6 1/2 per cent per annum.

It is believed that the objects for which the institution was established has been so far accomplished.

Israel W. Monroe, Treasurer of the Quincy Savings Bank in account with said Institution.

For amount received from 601 depositors including dividends which have been added to their accounts, $102,395.45

For amount of tenth dividend to be declared this day, 1,270.24

For amount of extra dividends being the profits over and above the regular semi-annual dividends for the last 5 years 1,405.41

THE WEBSTER WRIT OF ERROR REJECTED. In the Supreme Judicial Court, last Friday morning, Chief Justice Shaw delivered the opinion of the Court upon the petition made a few days since for a writ of error in the case of Prof. John W. Webster; and the result is, that all objections raised by prisoner's counsel were overruled, and the petition dismissed. The Chief Justice occupied about one hour in reading the opinion, which was very ably drafted, and elaborately discussed the different points presented for consideration.

"Doctor, I'm dying mint 13," said the little fellow, "for my sight grows dim. God bless you, Mr. Danforth."

"Can I do nothing for you, Dick?" said I; "you saved my life. I would coin my blood to buy yours."

"I have nothing to ask—I don't want to live

—only, if it's possible, let me be buried by my mother—you'll find the name of the place, and all about it in my trunk."

SUICIDE IN NORTH WETMOUTH. Mr. Henry F. Spafford committed suicide in North Weymouth on Tuesday, by hanging himself to a tree, in a small swamp about a quarter of a mile from his residence. Mr. Spafford was a young man who was respected by all; was twenty-four years old, and leaves many warm friends, who deeply mourn his loss. No cause can be assigned for this rash act.

NEW YORK, SEPT. 16, 1848.

Messrs E. Brinley & Co.—

Dear Sirs:—The vial of Valerian which you so kindly forwarded me for trial, came very opportunity, and I administered it the next day in a case of Hysteria, and afterward in high Nervous Excitation. In both cases it had the excellent effect attributed to this drug, but which in the usual form it is administered is rarely seen uncombined with nausea or some other unpleasant results. In the opinion expressed by Professor Phelps, of Dartmouth College, I entirely concur; and I trust you will early and generally introduce it into New York, that we may have an opportunity of using it in those cases where it must be so desirable.

Very truly, your obedient servant,

DIED.

In this town, 14th inst., William Allen, aged 4 months and 3 days.

As lovely Spring o'er earth its beauties spread,
This tender bud drooped, withered and decayed;

The richest culture earth could e'er afford,

Changed not the purpose nor the will of God.

In silence, then, my soul aspiring view,

The babe in heaven, transplanted there anew;

His suffering days are past, has found a friend,

On whom he may repose till time shall end.

POETRY.

TO MY SISTER,
LATELY MARRIED.
Let not my sister, though a wife,
Bid all her fears adieu,
Comforts there are in married life,
But there are causes too.

I do not wish to mar your mirth,
With an ungrateful sound,
But yet remember, bliss on earth,
No mortal ever found.

Your prospects and your hopes are great;
May God your hopes fulfil;
But you will find in every state
Some difficulties still.

The rite which lately joined your hands,
Cannot ensure content;
Religion forms the strongest bands,
And Love the best cement.

A friendship founded on esteem,
Life's battering blast endures;
It will not vanish as a dream,
And which, I hope, is yours.

But yet God's blessing daily crave,
Nor trust your youthful heart;
You must Divine assistance have
To act a prudent part.

Tho' you have left a parent's wing,
Nor longer ask its care;
It is but seldom husbands bring
A lighter yoke to wear.

They have their humors and their faults,
So mutable is man;
Excuse his failings in your thoughts,
And hide them if you can.

No anger nor resentment keep,
Whatever is amiss;
Be reconciled before you sleep,
And seal it with a kiss.

Should he see cause to reprehend,
Bear it with mild address;
Remember he's thy dearest friend,
And love him ne'er the less.

It's not the way to scold at large,
To clamor, rage, and boast;
For wins their duty best discharge,
Who descend the most.

Mutual attempts to serve and please,
Each other will endear;
Thus may you spend your life with ease,
Nor discord interfere.

Thus give your tender passions scope,
Yet better things pursue,
Be Heaven the object of your hope,
And lead him thither too.

Since you must both resign your breath,
And only God knows when;
So live that you may part at death
To meet with joy again.

And may the Lord your ways approve,
And grant you both a share
Of His redeeming, saving love,
And providential care.

THE BIRTH OF WOMAN.
How cold was the planet, ere love lent his light
To beam on the desolate regions of night!
Deep silence and solitude circled the earth,
And sad was creation, till love had his birth!

He sprung out of chaos, and, flushed with desire,
The young sun leapt forth from his mansion of fire;
Earth felt the fond passion awake in her breast,
And pursued him with lone-laughing eyes to the west.

The dark caves of ocean re-echoes his call,
And his power and his sway were acknowledged by all;
Through the bounds of existence the soft impulse ran,
And shed its bright beams on the bosom of man.

All joyless and lone on the threshold of fate,
He felt the deep rapture, and stopt forth estate;
While the visions of love their fullness impart
Fresh fire to his eyes, and new streams to his heart!

She came in the fulness of beauty and love;
The Eve of his dreams came down from above!
The stars sang in heaven, and sweet was the morn,
As angels uncircumcised, when woman was born.

In the might of his joy, in his heart's gushing pride,
He clasped to his bosom his heaven-blooming bride!
While rapture and music encircled the earth,
And fair was creation, when love had his birth.

ANECDOTES.

A prisoner brought up in court, the following dialogue passed between him and the sitting magistrate:
"How do you live?"
"Pretty well, sir; generally a joint and pudding at dinner."
"I mean, sir, how do you get your bread?"
"I beg your worship's pardon; sometimes at the bazaar, and sometimes at the grocer's."
"You may be as witty as you please, sir; but I mean simply to ask you, how do you do?"
"Tolerably well, I thank your worship; I hope your worship is well."

When the British soldiers were about to march out and lay down their arms at Yorktown, Washington said to the American army, "My boys, let there be no insults over a conquered foe: when they lay down their arms, don't huzzza—posterior will huzzza for you."

A chaplain at a state prison was asked by a friend how his parishioners were. All under conviction, was the reply.

al, and wholesale dealers in cotton in particular. Passing into the cars some three or four seats from the door, she suddenly turned round to a poorly-dressed and aged farmer, and exclaimed, in a tone of authority:—

"Will you give up this seat, sir?"

Of course, the old gentleman could not do otherwise than rise. Not a thank'ee, however, was given, a smile or even a nod of the head, in acknowledgement of the obligation; but the lovely countenance that ought to have been the window to a lonely heart, retained a cold and Indian-like expression of nothingness—a perfect "I don't care for nothing nor nobody" expression. Noticing that the old man's limbs trembled from long wear and age, and the rapid motion of the cars, we gave a young man twenty-five cents to give him his seat, and were soon after engaged in a mathematical calculation of the future price of bristles."

ISLAND OF CUBA.

The island of Cuba embraces an area of about 65,000 square miles, while population of about 500,000 and aggregate population of whites and colored of less than a million.

This population is taxed annually to the amount of over $24,000,000, by assessments levied upon every imaginable article of industry, of production or of consumption, upon the expenses of living and of dying, upon their religion and upon their infidelity, upon their litigation and upon their amusements.

These taxes are expended in supporting an army of 20,000 men, to intimidate the inhabitants, to man and support the Spanish navy, which is almost entirely stationed here to pay the salaries of officials, and to support the feeble and profligate government in Spain.

Cuba is governed by officials always sent from Spain. There has never been but one Captain General upon the Island, who was a resident when appointed. Ezequiel had for some time previous to his appointment in 1838, resided at Havana, as sub-inspector-general of the troops. He was too popular with the Cubans to be permitted to serve out even the allotted term of five years, to which this office is limited, and was soon removed by the jealous authorities at Madrid.

Within the last ten years, Cuba has been deprived of all representation in the Spanish Cortes, where three deputies had before always been permitted to occupy seats. The Governor General is absolute, and makes such laws and regulations as his caprice or his avarice may dictate. From his decrees the people have no appeal. The press is dumb under a censorship far more rigid than that of Vienna. Any petition signed by more than two persons is deemed seditious, and punishable with imprisonment.

Martial law has prevailed there since 1825, by which a suspected offender may be hurried into the dungeons of the Moro or to the gallows, without a chance of defending himself, or of being succored by his friends.

No trade can be followed, or goods sold without a license.

The Creoles, or native Cubans, are excluded, rigorously, from the army, the judiciary, the revenue service, and from all influential or lucrative positions.

Notwithstanding the enormous tithes exacted from the inhabitants, amounting to more than a quarter of a million of dollars yearly, they are obliged to support their churches, places of worship, and cemeteries, by individual subscription.

The farmers have to pay 2 1/2 per cent. on their sugar, and 10 per cent. on their other harvests when gathered, and their live stock when marketed. There is a tax of $1.25 upon every hundred weight of salt.

A stamped paper is required for certain transactions by law, which costs $8 per sheet, and a person must under oath, prove his poverty before he will be permitted to use a cheaper article.

No one can have in his house any company or amusement of any sort, if he does not obtain and pay for a license of $2.50.

Every inhabitant is compelled to pay for a license to change his residence.

No citizen is allowed to walk the streets after ten o'clock in the evening, unless he carry with him a lantern, and successively obtain leave of every watchman on his way, under a penalty of $8 for each offence.

He is not at liberty to lodge any new person in his house for a single night, whether a native or a foreigner, friend or relative, without giving information in advance to the authorities.

The African slave trade is notoriously encouraged by the government, and within the past year it is understood that Alcoy, the Captain General, received, by way of "gratifications" from the slave dealers, over $200,000 for slave cargoes arrived within that period. Offices of every grade are sold at enormous prices to unfit incumbents, from which sales a revenue is realized of over $200,000 annually.

Such is a portion of the grievances of which the Cubans complain. We do not think they greatly over-state them. Spain does not recognize in the native Cuban any political rights; she does not allow to him, or to his property, even such guarantees as are given by the most despotic powers. She has ever pursued a cruel and extortionate policy towards this island, which is without a parallel in the history of nations. Prostrate, bankrupt and degraded among the powers of Europe, Spain has always contrived to preserve her national existence upon the revenue derived from this ocean gem, of inexhaustable richness. In return, she has done nothing but task it for more. If the penalty of her greediness and tyranny shall be the loss of the island and the lives of those who attempted to defend it for her, she will neither receive or deserve but little sympathy from the rest of the world. New York Evening Post.

NOTICE. All remaining articles of the late Fair will be sold at public auction at the Town Hall, commencing at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

We hope the public will not permit so fine an opportunity for speculation to pass by unimproved.

Many of the articles,—we understand,—are elegant and recherche.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT. While engaged in drawing a charge, at Whicher & Co.'s Ledge, in this town, three men were dangerously injured. Daniel Riley, and John Loring, were much hurt, and O. White, very severely.

We would call the attention of our readers to the notice in another column of William G. Allen, who delivered two Lectures here last summer, upon the History and Prospects of the African Race.

To accommodate the public the Old Colony Railroad train for Cohasset leaves Boston at 5 1/2 P. M. stopping at Quincy.

ABORIGINAL RELICS. A few days since, the remains of some half dozen Indians were dug from the northern side of Mount Hope, near Ward's piggyery, in Quincy. They were found buried a short distance from each other, about three feet below the surface of the earth, and some of the bones, particularly the skulls and teeth, were in a good state of preservation. Reposing beside their remains, were found certain implements of warfare, such as daggers, a sword, &c., and under each head was clustered a profusion of glass beads, various in size, and many "as good as new." On the head, perhaps of the noblest of them all, was found a helmet of brass indicative of the warrior chief; which, on being removed, exhibited the black, shiny hair, still undecayed, after the burial of two hundred years. It is probable this was a sepulchre of the followers of Chichataubut.

The papers are proposing candidates for Governor. Briggs will decline a re-election next fall. The names of Hon. John P. Bigelow, present mayor of Boston, Hon. Samuel Hoar, of Concord, and Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, have been mentioned in this connection. They all have strong friends, but we are inclined to think Mr. Bigelow has the advantage of the other two, in not having any very bitter opponents.

NARROW ESCAPE. An accident occurred in Hingham; last Saturday afternoon which came very near costing the subject of it his life. Mr. Warner who has been for some time engaged in blasting a rock for a well at the house which Mr. Thomas L. Hobart is erecting, descended into the well soon after an explosion, and before the smoke had escaped. One of the workmen in the house thinking he heard groans in the well, hastened to the spot, but could see nothing through the smoke; imagining, however, what the trouble was, he called for the assistance of others, and knowing that Mr. Warner was in the habit of fastening one foot by a noose or hook in the rope by which he descended, they began to turn the windlass to which the rope was attached, and soon succeeded in hoisting the adventurous man by one foot, head downwards, into the upper regions, where the clear air restored him to consciousness. The gas at the bottom of the well, about 40 feet below the surface of the ground, had caused him to faint; and if the noose had happened to slip from his foot, he would inevitably have died there; or if it had become unfastened during the process of hoisting, he would have been dashed the jagged rocks at the bottom. Let his narrow escape operate as a caution against any similar attempts by himself or others hereafter.

FROM HAVANA. "The Ohio from New Orleans, and the Isabel from Charleston, arrived June 18th. The latter brought the instructions of Mr. Secretary Clayton to the American Consul, of the 31st and 32d, copies of which we find in the papers by the Ohio; but whether any of later date, for which there was ample time, I cannot at present ascertain.

That Consumption is almost always produced by a cold that might be easily cured: That Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry will cure any cough or cold, no matter how long standing. The milder form of Consumption itself is also cured by this Balsam. That it is conceded by many lawyers, clergymen and physicians, that this Balsam has never been equalled for efficacy in all affections of the Lungs and Liver. That score now rejoice in the possession of good health, who, but for this Balsam, would have been in their graves—having been given up to die by their friends and physicians.

FLUID EXTRACT OF VALERIAN.

This medicine is a simple concentration of one of the best Remedial Agents known for Nervous Irritation. Sleeplessness, Headache, &c., as approved by the ablest dispensatories of the day. The distinguished Surgeon and Physician, Augustus K. Gardner, M. D., of New York, thus writes:

NEW YORK, SEPT. 16, 1848.

Messrs. E. Brinley & Co.—The vial of Valerian which you so kindly sent me, I found very opportunity, and I administered it in many cases of Headache, and afterward in high Nervous Irritation, in both cases it had the excellent effect attributed to this drug, but which in the usual form it is administered is rarely seen uncombined with nausea or some other unpleasant result. In the opinion expressed by Professor Phelps, of Dartmouth College, I entirely concur; and I trust you will early and generally introduce it into New York, that we may have an opportunity of using it in those cases where it must be so desirable.

DIED.

In this town, 13th inst., William Allen, son of Mr. Noah and Mrs. Ellen Hersey, aged 4 months and 3 days.

A lovely Spring o'er earth its beauties spread,

This tender bud drooped, withered and decayed;

The richest culme earth could e'er afford,

Changed not the purpose nor the will of God.

In silence, then, my soul aspiring view,

The babe in heaven, transplanted there anew;

These suffering days are past, has found a friend,

On whom he may repose till time shall end.

Our Ben came out the other day with rather a tall shirt collar, which "loomed up" all the more from his wearing a narrow cravat. "Seems to me," said a punning friend, "you show a great deal of color for a good-natured chap." "Well, I do," said Ben; "you see," he continued (making a personal application of the retort) "my case is very much like that of a subscriber to the—railroad—my color is up because my stock is so low, and a little striped." The other chap "mizzled."

The following is an extract from a forthcoming drama:—"You come from—" "Yes." "And you go to—" "And you had a father and mother?" "I did." "And you had a sister?" "I did." "And that sister's name was—" "It was." "And your name is—" "The same as my father's." "I knew it. Rush to my arms. Again I clasp my long lost brother! Again I do! Again! Again!—Again! Ha! Ha! Ha!" [Faints, falls on the stage, rolls over and "shoots" a pistol at the prompter.]

We were obliged to "drop" a subscriber the other day, who was willing to continue our paper, if we would take grave-stones in payment, and nothing else. He had always paid the printer in that way and would do the same by us. We declined his proposal, told him we shouldn't live to want anything in his line, and referred him to the editor of the "Bunkum Flag Staff," who takes "hay, grits and oats in exchange," but whether he will accept the articles offered us by our subscribers, is more than we can say.

The ladies have taken to shift collars and short jackets. The next jump, the Albany Knickerbocker expects, will be pants forty inches round the bottom, with high-heel boots and a mustache. How the tailor would blush when a sweet little creature, with a pair of piercing eyes, a mustache, and a sly voice, should enter and exclaim, "Sir, take my measure—pants—fashionable—tight fit, you know." Who would not be a tailor then?

BOSTON NOTIONS. Boston is known throughout the length and breadth of the land for the variety and popularity of its notions. One of its notions is the establishment of a gigantic clothing house known as Oak Hall. The popularity of this house has surprised all that know its history, even the proprietor himself. From a small beginning it has grown to be a large establishment, with branches in every section of the country.

NOTICES.

Lecture.

William G. Allen, of Boston, a colored law student, will deliver his third Lecture on the History and Prospects of the African Race, TO-MORROW, (Saturday) AFTERNOON, in the Town Hall, Quincy, at 6 o'clock.

The friends of Religion and Humanity, are respectfully invited to attend.

The regular monthly meeting of the Niagara Engine, No. 1, will be held at the engine House, on MONDAY EVENING next at sunset.

JOHN F. PIERCE, Clerk.

The Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society propose to celebrate the 4th of July, by a Mass Meeting in a grove at Abington. Their most noted speakers are expected to be present; and the Old Colony Railroad has engaged to carry the passengers to the meeting at half the usual price.

The Old Colony Anti-Slavery Society will hold its annual meeting at the Town Hall in Abington, at 9 o'clock A. M. of the same day.

To The Ladies;

DYER'S

WASHING, BLEACHING,

AND

CLEANSING FLUID.

THE greatest labor saving article yet discovered. By its use, washing machines and wash boards are entirely dispensed with, and not one quarter of the labor is required to do the washing of a family.

The Fluid is a chemical compound of sufficient strength to extract all foreign substances from the cloth by simply boiling a small quantity of it with the clothes, and without the slightest injury to the most delicate fabric.

The expense is not more than that of the soap ordinarily used, and besides this it will be seen that the great省 and wear of clothing consequent upon the old method of hard rubbing upon a board, and the use of the pounding barrel, is wholly avoided, an immense saving is thus made. It is emphatically the female's friend.

Warranted to give perfect satisfaction, or the money will be refunded.

POETRY.

FOLLOW YOUR LEADER.

"Follow your Leader!" So said HOPE,
In the joyous days when I was young,
O'er meadow path, up mountain slope,
Through fragrant woods I followed and sung;
And eye in the sunny air she smiled,
Bright as the cherub in Paphos born,
And eye my soul with a glance she willed,
And tinged all earth with the hues of morn.
Long she led me o'er hill and hollow,
Through rivers wide, o'er mountain's dun,
Till she soared at last too high to follow,
And singed her plumes in the sun.

"Follow your Leader!" So said LOVE,
Or a fairy sporting in his guise,
I followed to lift the challenging glove
Of many a maid with tell tale eyes.
I followed, and dream'd of young delights,
Of passionate kisses, joyous pains,
Of homed words in sleepless nights,
And amorous tear drops, thick as rains.
But, ah! full soon the frenzy slackened;
There came a darkness and dimmed the ray.
The passion cooled, the sunshine blackened,
I lost the glory of my day.

"Follow your Leader!" So said FAME,
In the calmer hours of my fruitful noon,
O'er briery paths, through frost, through flame,
By torrent and swamp, and wild lagoon.
Ever she led me, and ever I went,
With bleeding feet and sun brown skin,
Eager ever and uncontent,
As long as life had a prize to win.
But Dead Ses apples alone she gave me
To recompense me for my pain.

And still, through her luring hand she wove me,
I may not follow her steps again.
"Follow your Leader!" So said GOLD,
Else the brown of my locks gave place to gray;
I could not follow, her looks were cold:
Ice and bristle was the way,
And Gold spread out her wiles in vain.
So taking Power to aid her spell,

"Follow your Leader!" Exclaimed the twain,
"For where we go shall pleasure dwell."
I followed and followed, till age came creeping,
And silvered the hair on my aching head,
And I lamented in vigil sweeping
A youth mis-spent, and a prime misled.

"Follow your Leader!" I hear a voice Whispering to my soul this hour—
"Who follows my light shall forever rejoice,
Nor crave the perishing hand of Power;
Who follows my steps shall forever hold
A blessing purer than earthly Love,
Brighter than Feme, richer than Gold—
So follow my light and look above."

"Tis late to turn, but refuse I may not,
My trustful eyes are heavenward cast,
And over the sweet voice says, "Delay not,
I'm thy first leader and thy last."

"Tis the friend of my youth come back again,
Sober and chastened—but lover fair
Than when in those days of sun and rain
She shone on my path as a guiding star,
She led me then, a wayward boy,
To things of Earth, and never of Heaven;
But now she whispers diviner joy;
Of errors blotted, of sins forgiven,
To a purpling sky she points her finger,
As westwardly wearly I plot.
And while I follow her steps I linger,
Calm as herself, in the faith of God.

(From Godey's Lady's Book, July 1850.)

YANKEE DOODLE.

TUNE—"Yankee Doodle."
"Yankee Doodle!" Long ago
They played it to deride us;
But now we march to victory,
And that's the tune to guide us!
"Yankee Doodle! ha! ha! ha!"
How we made the Red Coats run
At Yankee Doodle Dandy!

To fight is not a pleasant game;
But, if we must, we'll do it!
When "Yankee Doodle" once begins,
Our Yankee boys go through it!
Yankee Doodle! ha! ha! ha!
Yankee Doodle Dandy!
"Go ahead!" the captains cry,
At Yankee Doodle Dandy!

And let her come upon the sea,
The insolent invader—
There the Yankee boys will be Prepared to revenge her!
Yankee Doodle! ha! ha! ha!
Yankee Doodle Dandy!

Yankee guns will sing the bass
Of Yankee Doodle Dandy!

"Yankee Doodle!" How it brings
The good old days before us!
Two or three began the song—
Millions join the chorus!
Yankee Doodle! ha! ha! ha!

Yankee Doodle Dandy!
Rolling round the continent
Is Yankee Doodle Dandy!

"Yankee Doodle!" Not alone
The continent will hear it—
But all the world shall catch the tone,
And every tyrant fear it!

Yankee Doodle! ha! ha! ha!

Yankee Doodle Dandy!

Freedom's voice is in the song
Of "Yankee Doodle Dandy!"

A N ECDOTES.

What literary men would a man name, on looking at a house on fire? Dickens, Howitt, Burns.

P. LOW'S UNION HOT AIR Cooking Stove and Fuel Saver.

THIS is a most beautiful and extraordinary Cooking Stove. The even and regular application of the heat to the Oven, gives this Stove all the advantages of a brick Oven—while at the same time the boiler holes are so constructed that the heat is immediately applied to the boilers from the fire pit, which makes this stove the most complete and finished Air Tight Cook Stove in America.

AS A COAL COOKING STOVE.

IT is just suited for the use of families in cities and villages, and will perform the cooking of a family of from 2 to 6, 10 or 20 persons with certainty and despatch. The fire-chamber is constructed of a size, form and depth, to burn coal with the greatest freedom and economy. WOOD may be used with equal advantage by simply dispensing with the brick lining of the fire-chamber.

is attached to the front, affording, of itself, ample convenience for light summer work, without the unpleasant effects and expense of heating up the main body of the stove; it may also be used at the same time that the rest of the stove is heated, greatly adding to its value, and rendering it altogether the most efficient.

Any person who will give this stove a trial, will be convinced of its superiority for ECONOMY, CONVENIENCE and DURABILITY, over any other Air-Tight Cooking Stove.

LET its price bring it within the means of all families who want a good stove.

A pamphlet containing a description and directions for fitting up and using this Stove is furnished, gratis, to every purchaser.

These Stoves of the different sizes may be examined at the

Tin and Sheet Iron Manufactury

of the Agent in this town.

E. S. FELLOWS, Agent for the above Stove, has also for sale at his Store, the REGULATOR, ECONOMIST'S, and various other patterns of Cook Stove, as well as PARLOR, OFFICE, and CYLINDER.

—ALSO—

SHEET IRON, TIN AND COPPER WORK done to order,

Of the best Materials, and in a workmanlike manner.
